Proxmire Sees Nixon Involved In Watergate but Scores Press

NY.Times

By LINDA CHARLTON MAY 9 1973 Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, to denounce the press for being and involvement with White "grossly unfair" to President House attempts to cover up the Nixon, only a day after he had Watergate operation and retold a friend that he believed lated incidents. the President was "involved in In a telephone interview, Mr. Watergate up to his ears."

who has been a frequent and to many Nixon Administration slashing critic of the Nixon actions and programs but that Administration, said in his "I think fair is fair." speech that the press was engaged in a campaign of "McCarthyistic destruction" of dent should be treated with

3d, is said to have told grand

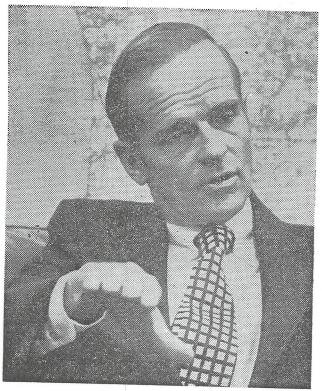

May 8—White House meetings that Senator William Proxmire took seemed to imply that Mr. to the floor of the Senate today Nixon had direct knowledge of Vatergate up to his ears."

Proxmire said that he remained "very, very bitterly opposed" the President that represented any more consideration than the press at its worst." his aides. But the crux of the The Senator singled out whole matter is whether or not Newsweek magazine, in whose the President had knowledge current issue the former White of the Watergate case, and House counsel, John W. Dean this should not rest on the jury investigators of alleged Continued on Page 28, Column 3

The New York Times Senator William Proxmire in his office in Washington

Proxmire Calls Press 'Unfair' To Nixon in Watergate Articles

Continued From Page 1, Col. 7 about the President. . . . There

Later today, Miles McMillin, the editor and publisher of The Madison (Wis.) Capital Times, said that Senator Proxmire "told me in a telephone converticular told me in a telephone converticular tol "told me in a telephone conver-sation Monday that President Senator Proxmire opened his

of it."

Senator Proxmire, asked to explain an apparent contradiction between his own expressed judgment on the President and his attacks on the press for printing "disputed, unproven, secret charges" against Mr. Nixon, said, "I don't think there's a contradiction. There his attacks on the press for printing "disputed, unproven, secret charges" against Mr. Nixon, said, "I don't think there's a contradiction. There are all kinds of reasons why the President's actions could be suspect," he said noting that apparently unsupported allegations of unidentified investilook, the President didn't do gators."

"told me in a telephone conversation Monday that President Nixon is involved in Watergate up to his ears, that he could not see how he could get out of it."

Senator Proxmire opened nis speech by praising the press for a "superb job" in uncovering the Watergate scandal and said that the investigation must continue "until the whole story is told no matter who it touch-there's a contradiction. There are all kinds of reasons why the President's actions could be suspect," he said, noting that he had recalled in his speech Mr. Nixon's campaigns for the House and the Senate.

Mr. Proxmire added that he thought there was "lots of evidence" that the President was involved: "I think in my mind he probably is."

But, he said, there was a great deal of difference between expressing his private convictions in a private telephone call sition to Mr. Nixon and allegation."

He noted that the President was directly involved in a Watergate coveruptor, President Nixon is being tried, sentenced and executed by rumor and allegation."

He noted that the "secret allegation" was reportedly made "by a witness as part of his bargain for immunity from his own prosecution," asking: "Doesn't the President Nixon is being tried, sentenced and executed by rumor and allegation."

He noted that the "secret allegation" was reportedly made "by a witness as part of his bargain for immunity from his own prosecution," asking: "Doesn't the President Nixon is being tried, sentenced and executed by rumor and allegation."

He noted that the "secret allegation" was reportedly made "by a witness as part of his bargain for immunity from his own prosecution," asking: "Doesn't the President Nixon is being tried, sentenced and executed by rumor and allegation."

He noted that the "secret allegation" was reportedly made "by a witness as part of his bargain for immunity from his own prosecution," asking: "Doesn't the President Nixon is being tried, sentenced and executed by rumor and allegation."

He noted that the "secret allegation" was reportedly made "by a witness as part of his bargain for immunity from his own prosecution," asking: "Doesn't the President Nixon is being tried, sentenced and executed by rumor and allegation."

great deal of difference between expressing his private convictions in a private telephone call—he made the statement to Mr. McMillin, who is married to the Senator's first wife, in the course of a conversation about family matters.

Mr. Proxmire's Senate speech drew immediate support from both sides of the floor. The majority leader, Mike Mansfield of Montana, and Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the minority leader, joined in echoing Mr. Proxmire's criticism. Senator Scott said:

"We are seeing the shaking and scaring of the people of this country needlessly. Thy read in the papers that somebody said something terrible" in monocent until proven guilty?"

He noted his consistent opport sistion to Mr. Nixon and to many of his legislative proposals. He also recalled what he described as Mr. Nixon's "ruthless orders" for renewed bombing of North Vietnam last December and the "cruel and useless bombing of Cambodia" now.

"But none of this," he went on, "justifies the McCcCarthy-leader, joined in echoing Mr. Nixon that is now going on." The several Watergate investigations, he said, including those being carried on by "at least 20 of the best investigations, are a guarantee of the discovbody said something terrible" ery of "every significant fact."