In the final 1973 measurement, President Nixon's job rating, after having risen slightly during November, leveled off at 29 per cent approval - two points above his low point to date.

The President's approval ratings have fluctuated by only a few percentage points in surveys since late September. Mr. Nixon's brief gain in popularity during November four points nationally) was the result of a sharp rise in support in the South, after his speaking tour there as part of "Operation Candor." His gains in that region, however, have proved temporary.

Mr. Nixon's job rating has declined 39 percentage points since late January. when a survey taken immediately after the Vietnam peace seitlement showed a record 68 per cent expressing approval of his performance in office. This decline represents the sharpest recorded for any President since these measurements were first undertaken during the presidency of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

A key factor in the President's slide in popularity in 1973 was Watergate. "Corruption in government" for the first time in more than two decades was, in the mind of the public, one of the most important problems facing the nation. In surveys since June, roughly three-fourths of the public have held the view that Mr. Nixon was, at least to some extent, involved in the scan-

Another major factor in Mr. Nixon's popularity de-cline was inflation — the chief concern of voters during most of 1973. In fact, it is likely that the President's approval rating would have undergone a snarp downtrend last year even if Watergate had not been in the picture, since the public traditionally holds the incumbent administration at least partly responsible for economic problems.

Analysis of the final 1973 survey results by population groups reveals that disapproval outweighs approval except among Republicans, where a slight majority expresses approval.

In contrast, only 17 per cent of persons who describe themselves as Democrats currently say they approve.

Following is the question that has been asked about each incumbent President since Roosevelt's presiden-
