

Watergate Committee's Last Stab

Washington

The Senate Watergate Committee's last official act yesterday was slicing a ten-pound chunk of baloney.

The baloney was presented to Chairman Sam J. Ervin (Dem-N.C.), evidently as a response to White House charges this week that the committee's final report would be "warmed over baloney."

Noting that presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler had described the committee's findings as just that, Dash said: "We thought some warmed over baloney would be appropriate."

"It's my job to select the evidence," said Dash, and passed the slices on a plate to reporters.
