A member of the House Judiciary Committee, Charles Rangel, tells us here in New York there's something missing in the pardon.

Rangel: I'm saying that if President Nixon wants compassion, the first thing we ask in this country is to admit that you've done wrong. We have not had that admission, and as far as I'm concerned, it's a political extension of the Watergate cover-up.

[End of Rangel statement, as carried by ABC in this segment of news broadcast.]
