

Notes on People

by Laurie Johnston

Ala.
NYTimes APR 26 1975

Putting his 11-year-old son in the care of an old friend, E. Howard Hunt Jr. looked up his Miami home—a sign says it is “protected by electronic devices”—and left for the Federal minimum-security prison at Eglin Air Force Base, near Pensacola, Fla. He will finish serving his Watergate sentence of 30 months to eight years, having served 10 months before he was released during his appeal, and will become eligible for parole Jan. 10, 1977.

David, his youngest child, will move across the street to live once more with the family of Manuel F. Artime, who drove Mr. Hunt to the prison. The former Cuban Army officer was field commander of the 1961 American-supported Bay of Pigs invasion by anti-Castro exiles. He is now a meat importer. In 1973, Mr. Artime reportedly told an investigation that he had delivered $21,000 from Mr. Hunt as “support money” for the Cuban members of the Watergate burglary team.

United Press International

E. Howard Hunt Jr. kissing Judy Artime before entering prison at Eglin Air Force Base in Florida. Judy's father, Manuel F. Artime, an old associate and friend, drove Mr. Hunt to the airport and will be host to his youngest child, David Hunt, while Mr. Hunt is in prison.