Watergate Spinoff

New York

Anthony J. Ulasewicz, the former New York City policeman who regaled the nation with tales of Watergate bungling, was indicted yesterday for filing false tax returns while employed as a White House investigator.

Ulasewicz, 55, was named in a two-count indictment handed up by a Brooklyn federal grand jury charging that he understated his income in 1971 and 1972. If convicted on both counts, he faces six years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

The indictment charged that Ulasewicz stated that he earned about $16,000 in 1971 and $27,000 in 1972 when "he then and there well knew and believed he received substantial gross income in addition."

Ulasewicz, with his slicked-back hair and gravel voice, gave a measure of comic relief to the Senate Watergate hearings with his tales of clandestine meetings with Watergate conspirators to distribute hush money in mid-1972 and early 1973.

In all, Ulasewicz testified that he had distributed a total of $219,000 in hush money to Watergate conspirators. During the Watergate hearings, Ulasewicz testified he was paid $22,000 in 1971 and $24,000 in 1972 by the White House.

His tax returns for those years showed only $16,506 income as a private investigator in 1971 and $5000 income from his business and $2092 in additional income for 1972. He also received an annual $10,000 police pension.
