

kcbs radio, San Francisco

2 May 1975

transcribed from tape
from local newscast (first few words erased indicated by [ ])

Announcer: [Richard Nixon was not un] stable in his last days as President; that's the view of Nixon's Watergate attorney, James St. Clair.

St. Clair (voice): Certainly there were occasions when the the former President was highly emotional, particularly when he addressed members of the White House upon his resignation. If that is defined as unstable, so be it. [There's] no question but it was a highly emotional occasion, and I'm satisfied that he must have had other times -- (word garbled) the day before, when he met with Congressional leaders, were highly emotional ~~times~~ periods of times, but very frankly, to my ~~own~~ observation, I never observed him when he was in my judgment, mentally unstable.

Announcer: St. Clair, making his remarks before a Law Day gathering in Long Beach.

(end item)

See also SFChronicle 3 May 75 [AP].