Ford Takes a Shot

President Ford — hoping to give his troubled swine flu inoculation program a shot in the arm — got himself yesterday. Rear Admiral William Lukash (right), Mr. Ford's personal physician, administered the presidential vaccination in the White House, and then inoculated the President's wife, Betty, and their son and daughter, Jack and Susan. "You mean it's all over?" asked Mr. Ford after getting his shot. "I didn't feel a thing."
