

'President's Men' Does It Again

New York

For the second time in 24 hours, "All the President's Men" has been chosen as the best motion picture of 1976, this time by the National Society of Film Critics.

The New York Film Critics Circle made a similar choice Monday. (3 JAN)

Meeting Tuesday at the Algonquin Hotel, the National Society selected "Taxi Driver" as second best movie of the year.

Named best director was Martin Scorsese for "Taxi Driver," with Alan Pakula runner-up for "President's Men."

Sissy Spacek was chosen best actress in "Carrie," with Faye Dunaway second choice for "Network."

Best actor was Robert de Niro for "Taxi Driver," with a tie for second between William Holden in "Network" and Gerard Depardieu for "The Last Woman."

Jodie Foster of "Taxi Driver" was voted best supporting actress, with Talia Shire in "Rocky" placing second.

Jason Robards was the choice for best supporting actor in "President's Men," with Harvey Keitel in "Taxi Driver" second.

Alain Tanner and John Berger shared honors for best screenplay for "Jonah, Who Will Be 25 in the Year 2000." Second place went to Paddy Chayefsky for "Network."

The award for best cinematography went to Haskell Wexler for "Bound for Glory," with Nestor Almendros runner-up for "The Marquise of O..."
