If you have time to read and comment on the enclosed Esquire piece*, I'd appreciate what your analysis suggests. I made a few immediate, hasty notes, not then remembering all I had noted on readings. Much of what I left out has come to mind. The areas in which I would welcome views are professionalism (writer and magazine); worthiness of publication; newsworthiness or lack in content; timing, meaning of appearance but also, if you think you can, any dating of writing; objectives, if any, of author, editors, magazine; ulterior purposes or motives, if any; any obvious designs other than normal journalistic, if any. I will probably be enclosing other things.
