

Glad to get NYT 1/17 on the CIA teaching the NYfuzz how to store and retrieve information. It simply can't be said that the FBI can't do and can't teach this with regard to organized crime. Ergo, the purpose was domestic intelligence only, not organized crime. And this kind of thing FNI can teach as well as CIA. Conclusion: what CIA was teaching was different than what FBI would and probably had. What Tuermer is really saying is that has been CIA policy. Reminds me of the Montgomery County, Md. detective who told me that he had been shown the Zapruder film over and over again, including the slides. This is part of normal police training? I would be willing to say that this story makes it possible to believe that on the fiction that they are involved in "foreign" intelligence, CIA has built up an enormous system of dossiers on people whose politics are to the left of Goldwater. Je's 1/24 note on filing concludes with the noats of a simple solution for the walking Hermes. Fine crawls slowly, but short of clamping it to the very small, lightweight typewriter table I have to us for space limitations, leaving a fine one unused, I'd welcome the secret. I think much of my trouble with it, not great, just a contributing factor in very bad typing, comes from shifting. I'm vigorous with it as with punching when I get wound up. On the files, I'm resolved to chaos. There was a time when I put slips in the various files and notes on a card file, but it got to be too much. Then I forget. Today, for example, I wanted to get ~~ready~~ ^{copies} I filed of the stories on the Romero (Jose Luis) French book on the JFK assassination. Can't. Lesar says both sides in current Computers, with one of the more paranoid CIA nuts saying it is a fake. I agree or I'd have less trouble finding. There is real steam behind it, so I suspect SDECE again. Files again: Consider that I have more than 2,000 pages of unread CDs, with all those names, the real reason they are unread. HW 1/29/73
