

HW:

In case you missed it, suggest note the 2nd paragraph of the 2nd column.* We had not heard this previously about Stennis. Under ordinary circumstances it would not, of course, trigger an attack on him. However it may be questioned whether all the circumstances are ordinary. The GL had just won a landslide victory, was subtly but rather obviously curt with Helms according to the scale of politesse used in letters of acceptance and dismissal, and may have had quite a row with Helms over policy before giving him the boot. In other words, he was in no mood to detour around obstacles in his path. Or perhaps the Pankow faction around him was in no such mood. Saw a line somewhere that there had been no crime whatever ~~ix~~ for some time in the neighborhood where Stennis lives. I'm not plugging this line, just spelling it out to keep in mind.

Many thanks for sending this along.
