

HW:

Yr 2/26 and 3/3/75 memos on Deep Throat Jr. and his offering.

Agree with your diagnosis of his scenario as reminiscent of Executive Action. On the other hand I do not discount the probability that many large corporations waxed enormously fat off various aid programs abroad.

While I haven't met the man, as you have, I don't disagree with your opinion that he's sick, but at this distance have no particular reason to agree with it either. My inclination would be to guess from this perspective that he's had some connection with the company in the past, odd jobs and such, and may be trying to promote another one. From your description it's difficult to visualize their assigning him to you at this time -- they'd need someone much less readable and recognizable if serious business were intended. He could have been given a tentative go-ahead just to see whether you'd bite. You didn't, so any seriousness remains to be demonstrated. Not necessarily by him.
