

Apparent Policy Violation

Peace Corps Man's Intelligence Tie

by Michael Taylor

A former high-ranking Army intelligence officer in Vietnam is now the director of Peace Corps operations in Zaire, an apparent violation of Peace Corps policy, The Chronicle learned yesterday. *

Army records show that William H. Crosson served as a top intelligence colonel in the American military command's headquarters in Vietnam from February, 1965, until April, 1966.

Crosson retired from the Army in 1967 and, after a stint as a public relations director for a Midwestern manufacturer of agricultural equipment, joined the Peace Corps in March, 1972.

He now directs the activities of about 200 Peace Corps volunteers in Zaire, the former Belgian Congo.

.....
In the volatile politics of Africa, Zaire has frequently been in the middle of sensitive political issues involving the United States.

.....
Crosson served in Vietnam from Feb. 1, 1965, until April 26, 1966, as chief of two different branches of counter-intelligence in the American military's joint intelligence staff of operation, according to a Pentagon spokesman.

.....

* Peace Corps rules prohibit anybody with past or present ties to the [CIA] from joining the Peace Corps.