NYTimes

SEP 17 1971

THE NEW YORK TIMES, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1

Prison Chaplain, at Guard's Funeral, Asks Separa

He Predicts More Riots Unless Change Is Made

By McCANDLISH PHILLIPS

Special to the New York Times

and warned that major prison upheavals would recur in New York State unless a separate institution was opened for inmates he described as "hard-core revolutionaries." freshly dug gravesite in St. Jo-seph's Cemetery here today BATAVIA, N. Y., Sept. 16—A widely known Roman Cathoic prison chaplain, the Rev. fames P. Collins, stood near a core, militant, Marxist revolu-Father Collins called for the early creation of what he called "a maximum security institution for about 150 hard-

Father Collins, a chaplain at the State Correctional Facility at Elmira for the last 12 years, is the imediate past president of the American Correctional Chaplains Association, a national organization of chaplains of three faiths.

As a veteran prison chaplain I predict it." going to have more than what you had at Attica,' he said. "Until this is done, you're

The New York Times/William E. Sauro

PRISON REFORMS STRESSED: The Rev. James P. Collins, left, a chaplain at Elmira prison, with the Rev. Eugene Marcinkiewicz, Catholic chaplain at Attica facility, at gravesite after the funeral yesterday of Carl W. Valone, one of the hostages who died.

Mother at Gravesite

The sounds of grief had just subsided at the gravesite. The body of Carl W. Valone, a 44year-old guard who died as a hostage during the storming of the state prison at Attica on Monday, was buried as Father Collins made his plea.

The victim's white-haired mother, Mrs. Mary Sica Valone, had sat quietly during the gravesite rites, held under a sugar maple tree now touched with autumn yellow. A few feet away was the stone marking the site where she had watched the burial of her husband, Joseph, in 1963.

As the burial of her son began, the widow's grief became too great for silence. "My son, my son—my son Carl," she called out.

Moments earlier, the victim's sister, Mrs. Willaim Bangert, had fainted and fallen to the ground.

Father Collins said he had come to this area to stand by his weary colleague, the Rev. Eugene Marcinkiewicz, the Catholic chaplain at Attica. The two men stood together a few feet from the guard's grave as the family left the cemetery.

'You've got a new ballgame in prisons throughout the country now,' Father Collins said. He spoke of "a new breed of revolutionary who want to bring down the prisons."

"They're just as dedicated to that as most of us are to the rule of law," he said. "A small group of such men can tear an institution up. The ordinary prisoner has no choice but to go along. There is a fear of the militant by many men."

The chaplain said it was necessary to establish a small prison, "as tight as Alcatraz used to be," for such men, "without regard to color."

Father Marcinkiewicz, a tall priest with black hair and a face that seemed drained of color or joy, said quietly: "I feel such a void now. I've been in this prison 15 years, and I saw improvements in that time. May be not as many as there should be, but some.'

He agreed with Father Collins on the necessity of segregating militants from other in-mates, but he stopped short of endorsing the idea of a small, separate institution specifically for them. He estimated "the hard-core group" in Attica at 150 to 200 men.

Asked why 1,200 men are thought to have participated in the Attica rebellion, the 61-year old chaplain said, "I think there was pressure put on them.'

The priest saw some significance in both the objects and the order of destruction carried out by inmates inside the pris-

"First," he said, "they desecrated the chapel. Religion." They destroyed the chalice, missals, the portable altar. They tore my vestments and they wore them in the yard." This was done in mockery, he indicated.

"Second, they destroyed the school books.

"Third, they destroyed the industry areas, where the men worked and learned trades."

Father Collins stressed the urgency of keeping "the type responsible for the carnage at Attica away from the ordinary, unsuccessful burglars and robbers who are decent men, who want help."

He scoffed at the "instant experts" who are calling for reforms based on a vacuum of first-hand knowledge. "A man cannot be helped against his will," Father Collins said. "The eggheads do not understand this because they do not know prison nature."

The institution that he envisions would not require certain facilities. "You would not need a school-they don't want them. They burned this one. They would not need a chapel. They burned this one," he said.

Clean-Up Going On

The Attica chapel is also the auditorium, seating 1,500 men, where motion-pictures are also Prison chaplains receive a state salary beginning at $12,-734—one step above a lieutenant in the correction officer corps-plus a house and the help of a housekeeper.

"The inmates are quiet now,"

Father Marcinkiewicz said. "Teams of medical men are going from cell to cell, block by block, to treat the men who need it. I talked to all the men on the three floors of the hospital."

The chaplain said he had not yet gone into the cell rows to talk to the men there. He indicated that such action was still premature but that he believed that he would soon do so.

A reporter asked Father Collins about some guards referring to prisoners as "animals" and "niggers."

'The Department of Correction has sent down the word

K From list of inmate proposals. MYT 15 Sep: # 7, allow true religious freedom for some time that this kind of director in charge of the Lewis nonsense has got to stop," he said. He spoke also of "the inhad not seen any bullet wounds said. He spoke also or the in- had no solence and language that the on the body.

Solence and language that the on the body.

Dr. John Edland, who per-

Both chaplains had concelebrated the funeral mass for Mr. Valone with Father Paschal Acuuavia, pastor of the St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church here, and two other priests.

Some 320 persons attended the mass, about a third of them children from the parochial school adjoining the church. Six of his comrades from the guard force bore the flag-covered coffin out of the church. There was not the outpouring of correction officers from across the state that marked the first two funerals for hostages yester-

After darkness fell tonight scores of cars preceded by a a motorcycle escort drove to the honor guard today as funeral Attica prison where residents services were conducted for of the village and surrounding John J. D'Arcangelo, one of the countryside gathered for a can-nine hostages killed Monday at dlelight service to honor the the State Correctional Facility slain guards.

Mr. Valone, who had worked A solemn high mass was at Attica for 10 years, was Msgr. James D. Cuffney in St. a Genesee County and Batavia Mary's Church. Democratic committeeman, a The body was then returned member of the Glen S. Loomis to the Farrell Funeral Home, St. Nicholas Club. He had for-ducted by Dr. Henry Siegel, a merly operated the Silver Slip-pathologist from Westchester per Tavern here. He leaves, in County. Dr. Siegel did not disaddition to his wife and mother, close his findings. Mr. D'Arc-

Meanwhile, the bodies of five morning. victims? were at the Marley Funeral Home in Attica, awaiting funerals tomorrow. Hundred of floral displays had consent of the widow to deterarrived, and 3,000 people had mine the cause of death. Two visited the large frame house officers from the state police on Main Street to view the were at the funeral home durbodies.

A second autopsy was conducted this morning on the wives of employes at the corbody of Richard Lewis, the rection facility at Auburn, met slain guard whose burial in with Superintendent Robert J.

said today that it was he who make husband's jobs more safe. had asked the police to request This was done, he said, pending irresponsible acts committed at re-examination of autopsy re-Attica. Assemblyman Rifford ports.

formed the autopsy, said today Father Marcinkiewicz said in Rochester that he had been that "some inmates offered to telephoned this morning by Dr. and are working with the offi- Michael Baden, the New York cers in cleaning up, putting the City pathologist who is re-explace back in shape slowly." Baden told him that the findings of the new post-mortem were idtneical to the one that he had performed on Tuesday morning, Dr. Edland said.

In that report the cause of death was attributed to a single small wound in the back through which a bullet passed on an upward projectory, injuring the heart and blood vessels and lodging under an arm.

Guard's Burial Delayed Special to The New York Times

AUBURN, N. Y., Sept. 16-One hundred and fifty correction officers as well as county at Attica.

A solemn high mass was

American Legion Post and the where an examination was contwo sons and two daughters. angelo will be buried tomorrow

The examination of the body

ing the examination.

Last night, more than 125 Batavia yesterday was delayed at the request of state police.
Robert E. Fischer, the deputy superintendent; Assemblyman L. S. Rifford Jr. and Mayor Paul ty attorney general in charge W. Lattimore of Auburn to define the investigation of Attical cases, what could be done to of the investigation at Attica cuss what could be done to

The wives expressed anger, permission from Mr. Lewis's fear, and, most of all, frustra-family to postpone interment tion over what they termed the suggested to the group that James F. Smith, the funeral they form an auxiliary.

^{*} Un Valone, see Lelyveld MYTimos 15 Sep 71.