Attica Warden Seeks Delay in News Interviews

By JAMES F. CLARITY Special to The New York Times

Special to The New York Times
BUFFALO, Oct. 7—The superintendent of the Attica Correctional Facility said today that he did not want to admit newsmen to the prison to interview inmates for at least one more month.

The superintendent, Vincent R. Mancusi, suggested at hearing in Federal Court that allowing reporters into the prison sooner could result in "inflammatory" stories that might affect the state of "confrolled hostility" he said had existed at Attica since the four-day uprising there was crushed" men testified before Judge John custody of the 1,200 inmates. The number open the prison sould said, "can hardly say anything, make any remarks, anything prisoners might be damaged by interviews, but he did not say interviews, but he did not say on the case.

When Judge Curtin asked how news interviews would "affect the climate" in the prison, on, Mr. Mancusi replied: "I because reporters were not feel certain types of news stories can have an inflammatory" stories that might affect the state of "confrolled hostility" he said had existed at Attica since the four-day uprising there was crushed.

The Inmate," Mr. Mancusi said, "can hardly say anything, make any remarks, anything prisoners might be damaged by interviews, but he did not say on the case.

When Judge Curtin asked how news interviews would "affect the climate" in the prison, Mr. Mancusi also said he feared that the constitutional rights of prisoners might be damaged by interviews, but he did not say on the case.

When Judge Curtin asked how news interviews would "affect the climate" in the prisoners might be damaged by interviews, but he did not say on. Mr. Mancusi also said, "can hardly say anything, make any remarks, anything favorable, because then he would be a more stable to force the state to open the prisoners might be damaged by interviews, but he did not say on. Mr. Mancusi also said he feared that the constitutional rights of force he state to open the prisoners might be damaged by interviews, but he did not say on. Mr. Mancusi also said he day uprising there was crushed month away.'

Mr. Mancusi and the news-maintenance work, rather than men testified before Judge John custody of the 1,200 inmates.

"An inmate," Mr. Mancusi

The other newsmen who The judge asked Mr. Man-testified were Robert Schakne Asked why a month was Five newsmen testified that they had been denied entry to the prison for interviews with inmates since the uprising, which led to the deaths of 32 prisoners and 10 hostages.

The judge asked Mr. Mancusi if he thought "it would be helpful once in a while if inmates could read interviews" of other inmates and noted that newsmen had testified that this would take months to complete and that many of the guards of the guards of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Fred Ferretti of The New York Times, Clarence of other inmates and noted that newsmen had testified that this would "give at least two sides" News, Edward Hershey of Newsday and James Willwerth of Time magazine.