

REGISTERING HIS PREFERENCES: Anthony Clark preparing to deposit his ballot at Attica, N. Y., prison. MAR 1 8 1972 NYTimes A ttica Inmates Elect Committee To Meet Officials on Grievances

Special to The New York Times

ATTICA, N.Y., March 17-|Attica Correctional Facility, Inmates at the state's maxi- where 43 lives were lost last mum-security prison here se-September in a five-day revolt. lected 28 of their fellow pris- The election of such an inoners today to present recom- mate liaison committee to meet mendations and grievances to with prison officials was one prison administrators in what of the demands made by priswas described as an exercise oners during the rioting. of the convicts' "civic respon-William Dickinson, program and a second second

sibilities." director at the prison, said The 1,163 men eligible to today that the election was an vote in Attica's first prison exercise in civic responsibility election trooped to 10 voting and that additional elections booths set up in various cell-

blocks inside the riot-scarred Continued on Page 50, Column 8

Continued From Page 1, Col. 8

would be held every six months. Monitors were counting the ballots late today, and the results were not yet known.

The prison superintendent, Ernest L. Montanye, said the 28-member committee would elect officers to meet with members of the prison administration "on matters relative to the general welfare" of the prisoners.

Today's election followed spirited campaigning during which the prisoner-candidates placed posters and lists of their platforms on cellblock bulletin boards. Volunteers from the Batavia chapter of Sertoma International, a men's service club, monitored each election booth.

The only prisoners excluded from the election were the 84 who have been in segregated housing. Many of them are believed to have been leaders in the riot.

For some, it was the first time they had voted for anything in many years. A few of them, unfamiliear with the concept of the secret balloe, asked the monitors whether they sho sign their names to the ballot.

Privacy Is Provided

Wooden voting booths made in the prison shop provided privacy as the men marked their paper ballots.

At a typical polling place in Cellblock C, the prisoners stood in an orderly line in the corri-dor outside their tiny cells as they waited to cast their ballots. A stenciled sign hanging over the voting booths reminde them in Spanish and in English that "all inmates are required to make their beds and turn out the light when leaving cell."

One of the candidates, Robert Arcolino of Buffalo, was excused briefly from his work as a cook in the officer's mess hall so he could vote. He was ushered go the head of the line, so he could hurry back to his job. Other prisoners had the day off from work because it was their election day.

Mr. Arcolino, a blue-eyed, sandy-haired man who has served five years of his 71/2-to-15-year sentence for burglary, said the selection of the Inmate Liaison Committee "is one way they can straighten things out - God knows the place needs a lot of changes.'

Although white prisoners are in the minority at Atica, Mr. Arcolino said he thought he would be elected "because I am for the blacks as well as the whites—I am not one-sided." He added, however, that "after the riot I lost lots of friends -some were transferred out and some are dead."

He said he believed that the parole system shoul be im-proved and that prisoners should have more recreation and rehabilitation. Then he was excused so he could fin-ish preparing the lunch. "I made a tuna casserole, being that it is Lent and today is Friday," he said.