Chilean Officers Tell How They Began to Plan the class union and business leaders.

By August of this year, the military leaders had rejected any thought of a civilian political solution and had encouraged middle-class unions to continue their prolonged strikes against Dr. Allende's Government to set the stage for a military branches and with military branches and the same time, all political parties suffered a tremendous decline in prestige because of their inpressing because of their inpressi

By JONATHAN KANDELL, Special to The New York Times

SANTIAGO, Chile, Sept. 26—Middle-ranking officers of all three military services began plotting the coup against President Salvador Allende Gossens as far back as November, 1972, conversations with officers and civilians close to the situation have revealed.

The officers planning the coup, which resulted in the coup was given on the before Dr. Allende assumed the anticory of the coup were stanch anti-Marxists even before Dr. Allende assumed the an officer were stanch anti-Marxists even before Dr. Allende assumed the an officer were stanch anti-Marxists even before Dr. Allende assumed th

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1973

Take-Over Last November

ed when Dr. Allende invited Gen. Carlos Prats Gonzalez, the army's Commander in Chief, and two other officers into the Cabinet.

"Just about everybody in the armed forces welcomed this," an officer said, "because at the time we considered Prats a traditional military man who would put a brake on Allende."

But almost immediately.

But almost immediately, General Prats came to be viewed as favorable to the Allende Government. By late November, army and air force colonels and navy commanders began to map out the possibilities of a coup. They also contacted leaders of the truck owners, shopkeepers and professional associations, as well as key businessmen, who had backed the October strike.

"We left the generals and admirals out of the plotting," an officer said, "because we felt that some of them like Prats would refuse to go along."

The greatest obstacle, according to these officers.

The greatest obstacle, according to these officers, was the armed forces' long tradition of political neutrality. For more than forty years, they had not interfered in the political process ess.

"I could have pulled my hair out for teaching my students for all those years that the armed forces must never rebel against the constitutional government," said an officer who formerly taught history at a military academy. "It took a long time to convince officers that there was no other way out."

Pause for an Election

The ploting subsided somewhat in the weeks of political campaigning leading to the March legislative election. The civilian opposition to Dr. Allende thought it could emerge with two-thirds of the legislative seats and thus impeach the tive seats and thus impeach the President.

"It was supposed to be a last chance for a political solution;" one officer admitted. "But frankly, many of us gave a sign of relief when the Marxists received such a high vote because we felt that no politician could run the countries then confronted General Prats and demanded his immediate rsignation.

As soon as Gneral Prats resigned, on Aug. 23, along with two other general considered to be pro-Allende, the high command of all three service branches began mapping out the detail of their take-ovr.

try and that eventually the Marxists might be even strong-er." The Marxists' vote was 43 per cent.

By the middle of March, the plotting resumed and colonels involved invited a number of involved invited a number of generals and admirals to join.

"In April, the Government somehow found out that we were plotting," said an officer, "and they started to consider ways of stopping us."

All the officers interviewed asserted that the Allende Government began secretly to stockpile weapons and train paramilitary forces in factories and rural areas with the intention of assassinating key military leaders and carrying out a "countercoup."

The military informants, there were three episodes before the were three episodes before the Sept. II coup that could have led to an unplanned, bloody military revolt and possible civil war.

civil war.

On May 18, the commander of an air force base in Santiago threatened to carry out his own coup. But it was discovered by a pro-Allende colonel who commanded a neighboring infantry regiment, and who threatened to attack the air base. base.

The most publicized was the abortive coup of June 29, in which about 100 members of an armored regiment in Santiago, led by Lieut. Col. Roberto Souper, toook part.

On Aug. 48, President Allende and, allegedly, General Prats, forced the resignation of Gen.
Cesar Ruiz Danyau, the air force commander in chief, Jets streaked out of Santiago to the streaked out of Santiago to the southern city of Conception to prepare for animmediate coup. But leaders of all three branches urged their officrs to wait until Gneral Parts could be removed; General Ruiz also pleaded with his men to abandon the idea of immediate action.

tion. The leaders of the three branches then confronted General Prats and demanded his