ton Merr

By Jack Anderson

For the past five years, U.S. foreign policy has been almost totally dominated by one man-Henry A. Kissinger. Inside sources, with secret documents to back up their story, have told us how he has manipulated the diplomatic strings.

Throughout the Nixon years, Kissinger steadfastly maintained to inquiring reporters that he never recommended policy to the President unless his views were solicited. He merely presented "options," he vowed, and left it to the chief to make the decisions.

It was said that President Nixon would retire to the solitude of the Lincoln sitting room or to his secluded office in the White House annex, where he would pore over his options. After much agonizing and scratching on yellow legal pads, he would emerge and announce his momentous decisions.

This is not, according to our sources, how it happened. They say Kissinger seldom failed to give the President his personal recommendations, and Mr. Nixon seldom failed to take the advice. As a former Kissinger associate put it succinctly: "Nixon agreed with Henry on the things he knew about, and he trusted Henry on the things he didn't know about."

The pattern was set early in 1969, when Mr. Nixon gave the National Security Council staff a pep talk. After a few general remarks, according to several eye-witnesses, he nodded to-ward Kissinger. "Henry and I sions. They talked about world come when Mr. Nixon called in are going to end the war," the issues in terms of personalities, his Cabinet or other associates

President said, with a sly smile. and they were often vulgar, rip- to brief them on his foreign p "We want you fellows to take ping into foreign leaders with icy decisions. As he spoke care of the rest of the world."

y-Go-Round

Our sources say Mr. Nixon marks. then launched into a furious When and vulgar assault on the State Department. Foreign policy was going to be handled by the White House, he declared, and not by the "striped-pants faggots" at Foggy Bottom.

There was a collective gasp from the two dozen NSC staff members. President Nixon, with his penchant for saying the wrong thing at the wrong time, had forgotten that the majority of his audience had come to the White House from the Foreign Service.

Thereafter, Kissinger set up his own private State Department in the basement of the White House, where he directed every aspect of the decisionmaking machinery.

He presided over the National Security Council, which determined overall policy. He controlled the super-secret Committee of Forty, which plotted covert activities. He also headed the Washington Special Action Group, which assembled to manage crises.

The secret minutes show that Mr. Nixon seldom attended crucial meetings, these waited for Kissinger to fill him in. The two men conferred frequently.

Sources who were called into their private meetings say Mr. Nixon and Kissinger apparently didn't engage crude, sometimes cruel re-

When Kissinger traveled abroad, he kept the President informed with cryptic personal messages. Only the two of them understood some of the references.

A typical message from Kissinger in the Middle East, as recalled by a source who saw it, reported: "Met with Number One. Discussed options. He agrees in principle.

Most of Kissinger's recommendations to the President were submitted formally in secret memos. which were guarded as closely as nuclear secrets. Very few of Kissinger's associates are aware such documents exist.

We, however, have seen some of them. A typical Kissinger-to-Nixon memo would be typed on White House letterhead and stamped SECRET. Kissinger would begin with terse background information, and then outline his recommendation.

At the bottom of the page were two blank lines, the leftmost marked "Approve," the other "Disapprove." Almost never, according to our sources, did Mr. Nixon initial the "Disapprove" space.

Usually, a series of "tabs" folexpressed in blunt, candid lanprove" and "disapprove" lines.

to brief them on his foreign polthem, he invariably consulted a paper pre-"talking points" paper pre-pared, of course, by the ubiquitous Kissinger.

Kissinger's personal memos and talking papers guided Mr. Nixon on the Vietnam war, the invasion of Cambodia, the South Vietnamese invasion of Laos, and scores of other initiatives around the world.

Our sources could recall only one major issue on which Mr. Nixon vetoed Kissinger's recommendations. That was the decision to bomb Hanoi and mine Haiphong Harbor in May, 1972. In that instance, Mr. Nixon over-ruled all of his chief advisers, including Kissinger.

Kissinger's domination of foreign policy has continued into the Ford administration. In-President Ford deed, scarcely been sworn in before he assured the world that Henry Kissinger would stay on.

Like Mr. Nixon before him, Mr. Ford leans heavily on Kissinger for foreign policy guidance. Our sources say, in fact, that Mr. Ford has not overruled Kissinger yet.

Footnote: Kissinger has some brilliant diplomatic achieve-ments to his credit, including temporary peace in the Middle lowed on plain white paper. East, detente with the Soviet These took up specific issues, Union and rapprochement with mainland China. But there have guage. Each tab contained "Ap- also been a few disasters, such as the India-Pakistan The crowning touch would Chile, Cyprus and the aborted come when Mr. Nixon called in "Year of Europe."

9, 1974, United Feature Syndicate. Inc.