

Two Witnesses

Jury Studies Kennedy 'Plot'

New Orleans

Dean Andrews Jr., a lawyer who told the Warren Commission he thought Lee Harvey Oswald was a "patsy," testified briefly yesterday before a grand jury hearing evidence in the district attorney's investigation of the Kennedy assassination.

Andrews and Josephine Hug were the only two witnesses subpoenaed for the secret grand jury session. Mrs. Hug, a tall, well-dressed brunette, formerly worked for Clay Shaw, the retired executive accused by District Attorney James Garrison of conspiring to kill the late President Kennedy.

In testimony before the Warren Commission in 1964, Andrews, who now is an assistant district attorney of suburban Jefferson parish (county), said:

"There's three people I am going to find: One of them is the real guy that killed the President; the Mexican, and Clay Bertrand."

Asked than if he had considerable doubt about Oswald being the assassin, Andrews replied: "I know good and well he did not. With that weapon, he couldn't have been capable of making three controlled shots in that short time . . ."

Andrews told the Warren Commission that Oswald came to see him about legal matters several times during the summer of 1963, accompanied by a stocky "Mexicano" with a short butch haircut. Andrews said he had not seen the Mexican since that time.

Andrews said "Clay Bertrand" had called him after the assassination to ask him if he would defend Oswald.

Andrews said he had met Clay Bertrand "a couple of years" previous to that time, adding: "He's the one who calls in behalf of gay kids normally, either to obtain bond or parole for them."

Garrison's office has claimed that Shaw used the alias of Clay Bertrand.
