The suit declared, "for at least the past two years companies and individuals connected with construction work in the parish of Iberville have been subjected to a system of intimidation, harassment, favoritism and corruption un-paralleled in the history of this state."

IT WAS CHARGED THAT THE condition "has existed with the knowledge, consent and participation of the defendant."

Ourso was accused of demanding payments from companies for labor peace, threatening bodily harm or death against individuals, forcing companies to hire a guard service he owned and rent equipment and hire personnel he designated.

Part of the accusations against Ourso were brought out during the first series of Labor-Management Commission hearings conducted last year.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ACTED on information developed by the investigative staff of the Labor-Management Commission and his own staff of attorneys.

THE SUIT SAID Ourso threatened Harold J. Jarreau on Jan. 25, after the labor-management hearings were under way.

It said Ourso accused Jarreau of being a liar and "shooting off your mouth."

The suit said, "The sheriff then told Jarreau that a lot of people can get in trouble talking; that nobody gets by in his way.

"He pointed to Songy, chief of police of Plaquemine, and stated that if Songy got in his way he would cut him down, or even if his wife got in his way he would cut her down to get what he wants.

"Further, Ourso told Jarreau he played games to win and that he did not ever lose; he advised Jarreau to keep his mouth shut and go back to work or somebody was going to get hurt, and told Jarreau he had too much to lose because Jarreau had a family."

Jarreau subsequently moved away.
