BATON ROUGE — Agents for the State Labor-Management Commission and the East Baton Rouge district attorney's office today arrested a Baton Rouge resident on two counts of public bribery involving a case pending against Teamster boss Edward Grady Partin.

Thomas E. Holland, who was described as an oilman and a former candidate for mayor of Baton Rouge, was charged with offering a bribe to Erby Aucoin of New Orleans to change his testimony.

PARTIN, controversial boss of Teamers Local No. 5 in Baton Rouge, was charged with aggravated battery in Ascension Parish on the basis of a statement by Aucoin that he was threatened by the union leader and other union members.

Aucoin testified at a hearing of the Labor-Management Commission that the incident occurred a year ago during the construction of a stock car racing track he was photographing. Aucoin was a cameraman for a New Orleans television station.

According to the Labor-Management Commission, Holland offered Aucoin $1,800 and a $25,000 a year job with a firm called Scope International al Inc. to forget his testimony against Partin.

The incident allegedly occurred May 14, according to the charges against Holland.

HOLLAND was arrested by Joe Oster, an investigator for the Labor-Management Commission, and by Ben Givens of the district attorney's office. The warrant for his arrest was signed by District Judge Fred LeBlanc.
