WASHINGTON — James R. Hoffa, imprisoned president of the Teamsters Union, is again seeking freedom on the basis of an alleged wiretap involving Baton Rouge teamster leader Edward Grady Partin.

Hoffa today filed a new appeal with the U.S. Supreme Court seeking to upset his jury-tampering conviction and eight-year prison term.

The central allegation in the appeal is that Ewing King, a codefendant, was the subject of illegal electronic eavesdropping. King, a former official of a teamsters local in Nashville, was convicted with Hoffa and two others and sent to prison.

The appeal said that a day before the indictment was returned and after King had been accused of the crime, a conversation between him and Partin, a secret government informer, was electronically overheard, recorded and transcribed.

Hoffa went to prison three years ago. Convicted with him and also appealing are Thomas Ewing Parks, a Nashville funeral home employe, and Larry Campbell, a Detroit teamster.
