COMPULSIVE SPY: The Strange Career of E. Howard Hunt, Tad Szulc
Viking, $5.95

This is a slick package about one of the Nixon administration's most elusive "plumbers," Tad Szulc, who has written numerous books, more solidly compelling than those of Hunt only once, in 1961. In trying to understand Hunt he analyzed nine of his "compulsive spy's" 45 novels, which may be adequate for the kind of "incomplete ... sketch" he has attempted. In any case, there isn't much here that most readers who've kept abreast of the Watergate hearings and the revelations of the New York Times and the Washington Post will not already know. The book is too superficial and "iffy" for more sophisticated readers.

Baxter, John

Bob Woodward, "So Long, Howard," Potomac Magazine, WXPost 8 Oct 72 (returned to HW): "Under at least four pseudonyms - Robert Dietrich, John Baxter, Gordon Davis, and most recently David St. John - he has penned 40 novels including such titles as The Cheat, I Came to Kill, Unfaithful, Violent Ones, and Murder on the Rocks."

Dietrich, Robert Salisbury

See NYTimes 25 Sep 73, p. 28, which says Hunt wrote under this pseudonym.

Bob Woodward, "So Long, Howard," Potomac Magazine, WXPost 8 Oct 72 (returned to HW): "Under at least four pseudonyms - Robert Dietrich, John Baxter, Gordon Davis, and most recently David St. John - he has penned 40 novels including such titles as The Cheat, I Came to Kill, Unfaithful, Violent Ones, and Murder on the Rocks."

Contemporary Authors (no date), p. 251, seems to imply that the 5th through 15th titles listed under Gordon Davis were published under the Robert Dietrich pseudonym.
