SEOUL RENEWS TIE WITH CAMBODIANS

Move Paves Way for South Korean Aid to Lon Nol

Special to The New York Times.

SEOUL, South Korea, May 19 — The South Korean and Cambodian Governments announced today an agreement to resume official relations, paving the way for Seoul to provide assistance to the Pnompenh regime of Premier Lon Nol.

South Korea, which has a 50,000-man military force in South Vietnam, had been waiting for the restoration of relations before giving any help to the Cambodians. Seoul officials have said that only "humanitarian assistance," such as medical aid and relief materials for refugees, would be extended at the present stage. No direct military involvement is being considered now.

The accord was reached yesterday at a meeting in Jakarta between the two Foreign Ministers, Choi Kyu Hah of South Korea, and Yem Sambaur of Cambodia following the conference of Asian and Pacific nations on Cambodia, which ended Sunday.

The two countries have had no diplomatic relations since 1966.

Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, May 19—The Japanese Government decided today to send special envoys to Britain, the Soviet Union and the United Nations to promote the Jakarta conference's proposal of a broad international conference to deal with the problems of Indochina.

The 11-nation meeting in Jakarta named Japan, Indonesia and Malaysia as a task force to conduct consultations with the Soviet Union and Britain, the co-chairman of the 1954 Geneva Conference on Indochina, on implementation of its recommendations.

The Japanese decision on sending envoys, reached at a meeting of Cabinet ministers today, has not been formally published pending the working out of specific arrangements with Indonesia and Malaysia.

Pnompenh Paper Is Critical

Pnompenh, Cambodia, May 19 (Agence France-Presse) — The Pnompenh Courier, a pro-Government newspaper today attacked the results of the Asian conference on Cambodia held in Jakarta last weekend.

The newspaper said the conference participants had "talked about everything except the economic and military aid that our Government delegation had gone to ask for."
