

FEB 11 1971

C

ADAMANCY BY FOE IN PARIS EXPECTED

U.S. Doubts Any Progress in Vietnam Talks for Months

By HENRY GINIGER

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Feb. 11—Any possibility of serious negotiation at the Vietnam peace talks has apparently been written off for the next few months by the United States.

The move into Laos by South Vietnamese forces supported by American air power is not likely, in the view of experts here to encourage North Vietnam to drop in the foreseeable future the rigid tactics it has adopted at the negotiating table.

David K.E. Bruce, the chief American negotiator, is expected to continue to call for give-and-take discussion of the issues, either within the present framework of Vietnam or within a wider conference that would include Laos and Cambodia. But Mr. Bruce is reported to have no illusions about the response he will get, at least during the period when new emphasis is being placed on the military action.

Military Moves Expected

A military response by the Communists to the allied move in Laos is thought to be more likely. Hanoi may feel impelled to use large forces against South Vietnam to protect the supply lines from North to South Vietnam.

Vietnamization has up to now been the American alternative to the absence of a political settlement in Paris. The operations in Cambodia and Laos are in the official United States view designed to protect Vietnamization by limiting North Vietnam's capacity to wage war in the South. But there is acknowledgement that it is also discouraging North Vietnam's willingness to negotiate, if such willingness ever existed.

Another factor considered likely to keep the talks here at a standstill for a while is the presidential elections in South Vietnam scheduled for the end of September. What kind of regime emerges from them is important to the Communists, since, in addition to trying to get the United States to get out of Vietnam unilaterally, they seek to share power with non-Communist elements more accommodating to them than the team now in power.