New Envoy To U.N. Sworn In

Washington

Former Congressman George H. W. Bush was sworn in yesterday as the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations.

President Nixon, who chose the 46-year-old oilman for the prestigious post after former White House aide Patrick Daniel Moynihan turned it down, said "the world will be a safer and better place to live because of what men like George Bush do at the United Nations."

Bush, son of longtime for-GOP Senator Prescott Bush of Connecticut, succeeded Charles W. Yost, a career diplomat who became the U.N. envoy in the Nixon Administration. Mr. Nixon said Yost had served "with distinction."
