

Tough Talk by North Korean

Peking

If revolution breaks out in South Korea, then North Korea will not stand by "with folded arms," North Korean President Kim Il Sung said here yesterday.

He spoke one day after the fall of Phnom Penh at one of the most ceremonious banquets ever held in Peking. The Korean leader said his visit here was intended to adapt the "future common struggle" of this country and China to a "fast-changing situation."

He had been welcomed in Peking a few hours earlier by a happy crowd numbering tens of thousands.

As soon as he arrived, he called on party Chairman Mao Tse-tung, who had received no foreign visitors since mid-January.

Then Kim Il Sung banqueted with one of the most prestigious gatherings of officials ever seen in the Great Reception Hall of the People's Palace here.

Among the guests were party Vice Chairman and Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping, party Vice Chairman Wang Hong-wen and ten deputy premiers, including Chiang Ching, the wife of Mao.

Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia accompanied by his wife, Princess Monique, was among the 40 guests at the head table.

The Korean president spoke before 1000 banquet guests:

"Now that the colonial system of imperialism is in the process of total disintegration, the colonial rule of U.S. imperialism in South Korea will never remain intact," he said.

"If revolution takes place in South Korea, we, as one and the same nation, will not just look at it with folded arms but will strongly support the South Korean people.

"If the enemy ignites war recklessly, we shall resolutely answer it with war and completely destroy the aggressors. In this war, we will only lose the military demarcation line and will gain the country's reunification."
