Commands

For Vietnam

Bangkok

The radio of the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam yesterday broadcast the "ten commands" of the policy it intends to apply to South Vietnam. They are:

1. Existing agencies and organizations must carry out a policy of "revolutionary government." Abolition of the old system and its laws, dissolution of all "reactionary parties and other organizations serving imperialism and puppet regimes."

2. Sexual equality and freedom of thought and worship.

3. Prohibition of all divisive activity and a "call to unity" to "build the new life."

4. Guaranteed right to work, and universal "obligation to support the revolution."

5. All property of the "puppet administration" will be controlled by the PRG.

6. A "national duty" to care for orphans and the infirm.

7. Encouragement of rural areas to increase production.

8. Cultural entities, hospitals and schools run by foreigners should continue serving the people. Talents useful in building the country will be nurtured.

9! Welcome and kindness for soldiers who desert enemy ranks.

10. "Except for those who oppose the revolution — and they will be punished — foreign persons and property will be guaranteed safety."

(Early today, the new Saigon city government, in its first radio proclamation, banned prostitution and dance halls and announced that all illegal activities would result in stiff punishment).
