

Southeast Asia RoundupThais Report 2d Clash
At Cambodian Border

BANGKOK—Thai officials reported a second clash with Cambodian soldiers near the border in as many days yesterday. Both incidents have taken place in Surin Province about 200 miles northeast of Bangkok.

Lt. Gen. Suraphol Chullapram, chief of the Thai border patrol, said that the Khmer Rouge were apparently on expeditions to forage food. Other Thai officials said, however, that the Cambodian unit that crossed the border Tuesday was planting a land mine in an area used by Cambodian refugees to escape.

Reports of casualties vary, with some Thais saying their forces have taken no casualties while others say three men have been wounded. Cambodian casualties are given as five to seven persons killed.

Laos Warning

VIENTIANE—The Pathet Lao warned the United States to shut down its Agency for International Development mission here by Monday or "face the responsibility for everything that might happen."

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said four AID officials would depart by Monday, the deadline agreed on by U.S. and Laotian officials. He added, however, that transfer of AID property to the Laotian government probably would not be completed by then.

The Laotians appear to be delaying negotiations until they get instructions from Pathet Lao leaders who are meeting at their headquarters in northeastern Laos. The Pathet Lao have emerged as the de facto rulers of Laos following the flight of right wing members of the coalition government.

The Foreign Ministry denied charges that the American community in Vientiane was being harassed.

Meanwhile, a crowd of some 3,000 persons demanded the removal of the appointed officials in one of the districts on the eastern edge of Vientiane. Similar demonstrations have preceded the takeover by Pathet Lao officials in other towns in Laos.

Guam Shelters

AGANA, Guam — "Tent City," the first home in American territory for more than 90,000 Vietnamese refugees, is being pulled down. The temporary shelters' last 3,800 residents were moved to permanent buildings Tuesday.

There are still more than 15,000 refugees on Guam, including 1,200 who have asked to return to their homeland.

Vietnam Broadcast

A Saigon Radio broadcast has tended to confirm reports of fighting between remnants of the old South Vietnamese army holding out around Thudaumot, 20 miles north of Saigon.

The broadcast, monitored in Saigon, said some members of the Womens' Liberation Federation in Thudaumot "led the revolutionary army blocking a caravan of fleeing personnel of the former regime, while in another sector of the same province members of the federation, together with the wives and loved ones of soldiers, persuaded 2,000 paratroopers to disband and report to the revolutionary authorities."

After the defeat of the old government, Western re-

Associated Press

CLEAN-UP TIME— Military crews face the job of cleaning up the tent city camp at Agana, Guam, after the departure of thousands of South Vietnamese refugees.

porters in Saigon heard reports of fighting between North Vietnamese troops and hold outs in the jungles near Thudaumot.

Liberation Daily, the official newspaper of the new South Vietnamese government, said that 51 acres of land which former President Nguyen Van Thieu "had stolen from the people" in Giadinh Province near Saigon had been distributed to local peasants.

From staff reports and news dispatches