Vietnamese Aides Say Ties With U.S. Sought

TOKYO, July 30—Representatives of the governments of both Vietnamese said today that they are willing to establish full diplomatic relations with the United States, but they made it clear that they feel that the first move is up to the U.S. government.

The Vietnamese met with an American delegation of peace movement representatives here for the 30th anniversary observance of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Do Xuan Oanh, executive secretary of the Peace Committee of the Democratic Revolutionary Government of North Vietnam, and Dang Quang Minh, a former Vietcong ambassador to Moscow and now a member of the Central Committee of the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam, said their governments are ready to establish full relations with any country, "regardless of their social system."

Minh said that the U.S. government "must first realize its responsibility to contribute to the healing of the wounds of war by aiding in the reconstruction of South Vietnam. The responsibility lies not with the American people, but the American government."

Oanh said he thought the establishment of relations with the United States is "inevitable."

"My personal opinion," he said, "is that those three years of talks in Paris created deeper understanding between the governments. Now, if the American government will just translate the American people's wishes into action, we shall have full relations that will profit both sides."

Louis Kubicka of the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker group, flew to Tokyo this week from his post in Vientiane to discuss further aid with the Vietnamese.

"I hope in the next few days to discuss details of humanitarian aid that the AFSC will provide to the people of Vietnam," he said. The Quaker group has been assisting governments in both South and North Vietnam since 1967, with aid such as light machinery, medical equipment and medicines.

Oanh said the immediate needs of Vietnam include basic items such as clothing and medical equipment.

"We'd like to have a Washington Post man in Hanoi," he said with a smile. "But first, we have to put our house in order. We don't even have regular train service yet between Hanoi and Saigon. That won't come until next year."
