The house on King's Hill Avenue in the London sub-suburb of Worcester Park has flaking yellow paint, and there's a rickety fence in front and a scraggly backyard. It's a far cry from the Presidential Palace in Saigon, with its great iron gates, but the house is now the home of Nguyen Van Thieu, former president of South Vietnam.

He settled into the house, the home of his niece Kim, and her husband, Michael Dang, this week. Mr. Thieu refused to talk to reporters, who spotted him exploring the neighborhood with Mrs. Thieu.
They took a bus to a shopping center, where they bought paper towels and some electric plugs at a Woolworth's store.
