Hanoi and Saigon
Prepare the Way
For Reunification

NOV 10 1975

BANGKOK, Thailand, Nov. 9 (AP)—North and South Vietnam announced a move toward reunification today and indicated there would be elections to create a new government "based on socialism."

China's official news agency, Hsinhua, reported from Hanoi that a national assembly for "one Vietnam" will be set up after the elections, which will also create "leading state organs."

A Hanoi radio broadcast monitored in Bangkok said the North Vietnamese Prime Minister, Pham Van Dong, unveiled "a plan of governmental reunification" at sessions Wednesday and Thursday of the Current Affairs Committee of the North Vietnamese National Assembly.

A Saigon radio announcement broadcast at the same time said a similar conference was held in the South Vietnamese capital to discuss reuniting the North and South.

Negotiating Groups Formed

The proposals, approved unanimously, were announced by the president of the Provisional Revolutionary Government, Nguyen Huu Tho, to delegates from the government, the National Liberation Front and other groups.

Both Radio Hanoi and Radio Saigon announced the formation of 25-member delegations to "negotiate to implement a national election and a joint governmental body of the unified Vietnam."

It was not known when the two groups would meet. Neither broadcast gave details.

The reunification of North and South Vietnam began unofficially April 30 when Saigon fell to North Vietnamese and Vietcong forces.

Since then there has been little reliable information as to when the Communists would formally unify the two countries
