

Many Spurn School to Join Protests

WASHINGTON, May 13—A bipartisan group of young, liberal political activists announced today the formation of an organization to coordinate the lobbying effort for a Congressional amendment that would withhold funds for military operations in Southeast Asia.

Mike Brewer, vice president of the Ripon Society, an organization of liberal Republicans, said that the new group would bring together "young people who have not felt at home with street demonstrations and who want to work through the system."

Joining Mr. Brewer in announcing the formation of the organization, which is to be called Project Pursestrings, was Sam Brown, the national coordinator of the disbanded Vietnam Moratorium Committee, who was the chief student organizer in the 1968 presidential campaign of Senator Eugene J. McCarthy.

As Mr. Brown and Mr. Brewer spoke at a news conference in the Rayburn House Office Building, hundreds of neatly dressed students continued to swarm through the offices and corridors on Capitol Hill, telling the Congressmen from their areas of their opposition to the war in Indochina.

Coordinating Efforts

"The student groups are all out of touch with each other," said Jim Johnson, a 26-year-old sociology instructor at Princeton, who will run the Project Pursestrings office. He said that an object of the new group would be to coordinate the student efforts.

The sole purpose of Project Pursestrings, Mr. Johnson said, would be to work for passage of an amendment that would require all United States troops to be withdrawn from Southeast Asia by mid-1971.

The amendment is attached to the military procurement bill. It is sponsored by Senators George S. McGovern, Democrat of South Dakota; Mark O. Hatfield, Republican of Oregon; Charles E. Goodell, Republican of New York; Harold E. Hughes, Democrat of Iowa, and Alan Cranston, Democrat of California. A Senate vote on the amendment is expected in the next month to six weeks.

The organizers of the lobbying effort said that they would organize petitions, letters and telegrams to Senators and would provide speakers throughout the country.
