

MITCHELL EXPECTS VIOLENCE TO COME

WASHINGTON, April 24 (UPI)—Relieved that today's antiwar protest had occurred peacefully, Attorney General John N. Mitchell nonetheless persisted with his warning that there was substantial likelihood of violence in the next two weeks of demonstrations here.

"There is nothing that I have seen today that would change that," he told reporters as he left his Justice Department office.

Although he stuck by his warning yesterday that the "spring offensive" of war protests was likely to produce confrontations and possible violence, he said that earlier statement had been reported "seven different ways, all out of context."

Most authorities expect the most troublesome times this spring will be when the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice, led by Rennie Davis, attempts to carry out its plan to shut down the Pentagon, the Justice Department and the Capitol.

Referring to this group, Mr. Mitchell said there had been considerable "bravado" on the part of militants this spring.
