World Support of

Versailles, France

A six-week campaign, beginning April 1, by peace groups in the United States to end the Indochina war on terms laid down by North Vietnam and the Viet Cong received pledges of international support here yesterday.

Some 800 delegates from more than 80 countries ended a three-day World Assembly for Peace and Independence of the Peoples of Indochina with a charge that the American government was intensifying the war through bombing and the use of more sophisticated electronic weapons.

A final resolution called for support to "progressive and anti-war forces in the United States" and asked governments "to grant asylum to deserters and to support their right to repatriation."

The anti-war effort in the U.S. was outlined by an American delegation of 147 members, called for demonstrations April 1 in Harrisburg, Pa., site of the conspiracy trial of the Berrigan brothers and others, and at San Jose, Calif., where Angela Davis is being tried nationwide activity April 15 against the cost of the war including resistance to income tax payments; mass demonstrations in New York and Los Angeles April 22; and from May 1 to May 15 a series of rallies, lobbies and acts of civil disobedience "at centers of the war machine," at federal buildings and at corporations working for the war effort, and support for military personnel on active duty who refuse to participate in the air war.

The delegation said the campaign was designed to lead up to the two national political conventions in July and August and declared:

"It is essential that this American campaign be coordinated with the entire international anti-war movement so that the full weight of international outrage can be brought to bear on Nixon and his policies."

Jane Fonda, the actress, who joined the group yesterday as a representative of the Entertainment Industry for Peace and Justice, said that William J. Porter, the chief American negotiator at the Paris peace talks, "does not represent the American people and ought to resign."

Porter attacked the assembly last Thursday as "a horde of Communist-controlled agitators" and, in protest against it, refused to agree to a date for the next session of the peace talks.
