HOUSE GALLERIES SHUT FOR 3 HOURS

Speaker Albert Acts to Bar Recurrence of Disruption

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 10—

Visitors were barred for three hours this afternoon from the galleries of the House of Representatives to prevent a recurrence of yesterday's disruptions in which 40 antiwar protesters were ejected.

Speaker Carl Albert, Democrat of Oklahoma, ordered the action on the advice of the Capitol police, who had warned that other demonstrators might attempt to disturb the House proceedings.

He ordered the ban lifted after police officials advised him that possibly disruptive groups had left the area and after members of the House had complained about the ban.

It was the first instance in the memory of long-time House employes that the galleries were closed in anticipation of a demonstration. The Senate galleries remained open to visitors, and the House news galleries were also kept open.

More than 30 members of the House and the Senate are expected to join in a vigil on the east steps of the capitol at 6 A.M. tomorrow, the time that mines in Haiphong harbor are expected to become active.

There will also be antiwar demonstrations in the capital this weekend and the next. A coalition of local organizations announced plans today for a March Saturday from the ellipse to the Capitol, followed by a rally there.

Mass March Planned

In New York City, after meeting with more than 125 leaders of antiwar groups, trade unions and other organizations, the National Peace Action Coalition and the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice announced that they will sponsor a mass march on Washington Sunday, May 21.

Jerry Gordon, one of the coordinators of the National Peace Action Coalition, said that he expected large numbers of persons to join the march and in "sustained actions on Monday, May 22, and beyond in Washington and other cities."

And Fred Lovgren, head of the Student Mobilization Committee, said his group had issued a call for a nationwide student strike beginning this Friday.

At a session this afternoon of the End the War Convocation, held in a church just two blocks from the Capitol, several members of Congress urged those present to pressure their elected representatives into approving legislation to cut off funds for the war.

Senator Harold Hughes, Democrat of Iowa, called for "a mighty tidal wave of public opinion that will turn around those members of Congress who have never voted for peace before."

Mr. Hughes said he, other members of Congress and private citizens, would announce details of a nationwide "peace alert" on Friday morning.
