

Three Policemen Shot in Madison, Wis., As

VIOLENT ACTIONS REPORTED RISING

Frustration Also Mounts as Students Express Anger
—U.N. Is Target

By JOHN DARNTON

Protests against President Nixon's escalation of the Vietnam war continued across the country yesterday, amid signs of mounting frustration and violence on both sides.

In Madison, Wis., the scene of student-police clashes for three consecutive nights, three policemen were shot early yesterday. Two were treated and released and the third was hospitalized in satisfactory condition after surgery for a shoulder wound.

The police refused to make a direct connection between the shootings and the disorders at the University of Wisconsin that have resulted in over 50 arrests. But they said that the three officers had been shot by a 22-year-old activist as they were attempting to arrest three students who were later charged with arson. The shooting suspect was arraigned on charges of attempted murder.

In Albuquerque, N.M., where a 22-year-old first year law student and school newspaper reporter was seriously wounded by police fire on Tuesday, at least three more students were treated for superficial wounds from birdshot pellets.

Tea Gas Used

The shooting occurred during a night in which roving bands of student demonstrators dodged canisters that filled the air of the campus of the University of New Mexico with tear gas. Forty-five persons have been arrested there so far.

Here in New York the United Nations was the focus of much of the day's protest activity. Seventeen persons who said they were members of the New York Regional Anti-War Faculty and Students entered the Security Council chamber with a guided tour this morning and chained themselves to seats in the visitors' gallery, demanding to see the United States Ambassador, George Buh. They were released in midafternoon.

Try to Scale Fence

A few minutes earlier about 10 members of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War had tried to scale the fence outside the buildings, but were rebuffed by the United Nations security force.

In Dag Hammarskjold Plaza, at 47th Street and First Avenue, an afternoon rally sponsored by the New York State Student Peace Coalition drew a crowd of 100 to 300. The dozen speakers included Kurt Vonnegut, the author, and William Kunstler, the civil rights lawyer.

When the rally ended, at 2:30 P.M., a contingent of 200 students from the State University at New Paltz struck out for Times Square for a series of rallies starting at 6 P.M.

The Times Square protest, sponsored by the National Peace Action Coalition, began with about 100 persons picketing the traffic island on Broadway and 43d Street on which an armed forces recruiting booth is situated. They carried placards reading, "Answer Nixon—Out Now," and chanted "One-point peace plan, U.S. out of Vietnam."

The demonstration disbanded two hours later, under the threat of rain.

In earlier actions yesterday, at 7 A.M.—when the mines in North Vietnamese ports were activated — demonstrators massed to clog expressways in Chicago and commuter railroad tracks in New Jersey, and to attempt to block the main entrance to a Navy shipyard in Philadelphia.

At Princeton, 71 demonstrators, including six Princeton University faculty members, were arrested at 11 A.M. after locking arms to prevent employees of the Institute for Defense Analysis from entering that building. Wednesday, 58 students were arrested outside the research center.

On the college campuses, the situation remained tense. In Minneapolis, National Guardsmen were stationed at the University of Minnesota and the campus was placed under "police jurisdiction" after a night in which the police clashed with protesters who manned a street barricade.

At Gainesville, Fla., there was an afternoon of relative calm, 12 hours after pitched battles between the police and roving protesters that lasted several hours and covered a 16-block area, which was saturated with tear gas. A total of 174 arrests resulted, and at least 24 persons have been injured.

The Florida protests spread last night to the University of South Florida in Tampa and Florida State University in Tallahassee, where two coeds were injured by a car that the police said had tried to run a student blockade.

In East Lansing, Mich., 2,000 Michigan State University students were cleared out by a contingent of 600 state and local policemen after they had blocked Grand River Avenue.

Two hundred Rutgers University students stalled a Penn Central Railroad commuter train to New York City in New Brunswick, N. J. The railroad rerouted two other commuter trains and the police arrested 18 of the demonstrators.

About 200 people were arrested in Boston in a series of sporadic protests that swept the city, beginning with a traffic-snarling sit-in on Tremont Street. Across the harbor, at the Charlestown Naval Shipyard, a group of about 35 Vietnam Veterans Against the War chained themselves inside the captain's quarters of the Constitution, the 1812 frigate known as Old Ironsides. They were removed but not arrested.

Surround Federal Building

Then 500 to 1,000 pickets surrounded the John F. Kennedy Federal Building, where hundreds have been arrested since Monday.

Later in the afternoon, in Cambridge, across the Charles River, the police used tear gas to disperse a crowd of young people who swarmed over the campus of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, blocking traffic, tossing garbage cans and bricks, and starting fires along Massachusetts Avenue and Memorial Drive.

Elsewhere, as demonstrators continued their tactics of blocking highways, military recruiting offices and Federal buildings, groups opposing the protesters began attempting to break up the sit-ins in scattered places.

Members of a group called the Philadelphia Resistance attempted to blockade the main gate of the naval shipyard there with sawhorse barricades, but were routed when shipyard workers in hard hats waded into their ranks with fists swinging.

A group of 60 protesters spending the night in tents and sleeping bags on the lawn of the Pennsylvania State University research laboratory was almost rammed by a flatbed truck bearing four men. Three of the men were seized and one charged with assault and battery.
