

New York Magazine
□ filed Watergate

24 Jun 74

From Portrait of a Presidency, by Peter Jenkins:

.....

There is the famous incident at the height of the Cambodian crisis. At 4:55 A.M. on May 9, 1970, Nixon crept out of the White House, accompanied by his valet, Manolo Sanchez, and three Secret Service agents. He headed to the Lincoln Memorial, where he discussed football with a handful of demonstrators. Then he took Sanchez on a personal sunrise tour of the deserted Capitol. At the House of Representatives, he was met by H.R. Haldeman, Ron Ziegler, and Dwight Chapin. The President climbed onto the dais, sat down, and simply stared out at the empty chamber.

.....

[Author gives no source for this report. He is described as "a former Washington correspondent, ... now a London-based columnist for "The Guardian."]