A Brilliant Move

Editor — From the beginning of the current offensive it was fast becoming apparent that American troops were not in sufficient danger to warrant the massive air strikes and ship movements. President Nixon, ever quick to grasp the realities of the situation, in a brilliant tactical move ordered our men back into the combat area. Thus, having corrected this minor flaw in his battle plan, we Americans can now fully support the renewed bombing, confident that our troops are once again in some real danger from the enemy.
