Informer says Police officials discussed bomb plot

ART KUNKIN

Last Friday, in a letter to the editor, a well-admitted informed criminal turnover to the Los Angeles Police Department, said at a press conference held at the community center, KUNKIN said that he had known of this under the code name of "C" and that he had ordered a special search of the Los Angeles Police Department. "C" is the former police chief of the Los Angeles Police Department. "C" informed the President to throw special police officers into the troubled and politically sensitive areas.

Tackwood made a number of other statements. He said that at a subsequent press conference, he had informed the President to throw special police officers into the troubled and politically sensitive areas. "C" also informed the President that he had recruited a number of special agents to assist in the investigation of the Black Panthers, with the approval of the President. "C" also informed the President that he had recruited a number of special agents to assist in the investigation of the Black Panthers, with the approval of the President.

Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.

According to Howard, President Nixon ordered the Rand Corporation "think tank" to study the idea of canceling the 1972 election. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.

Rand Corporation "think tank" was studying the idea of canceling the 1972 election. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.

Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.

Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.

Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.

Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.

Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position. Tackwood was transferred with the consent of the President to a more sensitive position.
Washingtonerry go round
Did favored cronies get million dollar secret?

JACK ANDERSON
WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Treasury Secretaries Joint Committee, which investigates the privatization of the National Forests, is in the midst of a Congressional investigation that, among other things, is examining the possible involvement of some of the country's most powerful companies in the illegal take of federal land.

The investigation has centered on the activities of certain companies that have been accused of engaging in illegal logging activities on federal land.

One of the companies under investigation is a small logging company named Western Forest Products. The company has been accused of illegally logging federal land in northern California.

The investigation has also focused on the activities of several powerful companies, including American Forest and Paper Company, International Paper Company, and Boise Cascade Corporation.

The companies have been accused of illegally logging federal land in various parts of the country.

The investigation has also looked into the activities of some of the country's most powerful politicians, including Senator Ted Kennedy, who has been accused of accepting campaign contributions from some of the companies under investigation.

The investigation has also looked into the activities of some of the country's most powerful corporations, including ExxonMobil, ChevronTexaco, and ConocoPhillips.

The companies have been accused of illegally logging federal land in various parts of the country.

The investigation has also looked into the activities of some of the country's most powerful corporations, including ExxonMobil, ChevronTexaco, and ConocoPhillips.

The companies have been accused of illegally logging federal land in various parts of the country.