Colonel Links 2d General to Illegal Raids

By George C. Wilson and Michael Getler Washington Post Staff Writers Of FE 72

A major general in the U.S. Seventh Air Force in Vietnam went to a telephone reserved for secret messages and directly ordered wing commanders to disregard civilian-imposed restrictions and bomb a series of targets in North Vietnam, according to testimony given in a closed-door session of the Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday.

MAJ. GEN. ALTON D. SLAY ... named in bombings

Col. Charles Gabriel, commander of the 432d Wing at Udorn Air Base in Thailand, told the committee that the major general who passed the bombing orders is Alton D. Slay, formerly deputy for operations in the Seventh Air Force and now commander of the Technical Training Center at Lowry Air Force Base in Denver.

Committee Chairman John C. Stennis (D-Miss.), in describing Gabriel's testimony to newsmen, said Slay himself will be called as the next witness. But no date has been set because Slay, 47, is recovering from surgery.

Slay worked for Gen. John D. Lavelle, the Seventh Air Force commander who was fired for conducting 28 bombing raids which violated the restrictions existing at the time. The illegal raids were carried out between Nov. 8, 1971 and March 8, 1972.

Yesterday's testimony means that two top generals in the U.S. Air Force in Vietnam have been accused of playing a direct role in ignoring restrictions and ordering North Vietnamese targets bombed.

They acted at a time that Nixon administration officials said the bombing of North Vietnam—except for brief exceptions—was done only when the North Vietnamese fired at or otherwise endangered U.S. reconnaissance planes through such acts as training gun or missile radar on them.

The policy was called "protective reaction." Stennis said this unauthorized bombing went all the way back to November, but most of it was after Jan. 25 when a sheaf of false reports was written to coverup the violations of protective reactions rules.

Both Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, President Nixon's nominee for Army Chief of staff and Lavelle's former boss in Vietnam where Abrams was field commander, and Adm. Thomas H. Moorer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have denied that they authorized any raids that broke these "protective reaction" restrictions.

Lavelle, in the partial transcript of the closed hearings the committee released yesterday, said on Tuesday that he discussed with Moorer a proposed armed reconnaissance flight over Quanglang air field, a Mig base in North Vietnam about 165 miles north of the demilitarized zone. The reason he had to clear the mission with Moorer was because it was in an area normally covered by Navy planes, not Air Force.

This exchange between Sen. Harold E. Hughes (D-Iowa) and Lavelle indicates that Moorer approved a raid within the existing protective reaction rules. Moorer did not approve breaking the rules, however.

Hughes: Was this clearance (from Moorer) for a strike or for reconnaissance mission?

Lavelle: Sir, it was clearance for an escorted reconnaissance mission because there was a Mig on (Quanglang) field, and when we were fired on we were going to try to get the Mig on the field as well as the defenses around fired on? the field."

See LAVELLE, A4, Col. 1

LAVELLE, From A1

Hughes: . . I want to know this, then, why the Inspector General listed this as an unauthorized strike investigation aroused suspiling reconnaissance planes into when you had clearance from cions that Lavelle had taken a North Vietnam south of 20 dethe Joint Chiefs of Staff in addirect role in ordering pilots to grees, taking pictures; we vance to make it?

Lavelle: "Sir, he has several of his strikes on the original list that are, I think, quite inaccurate. We now have a revised list that I have seen and I question some of those, too.

Hughes: But you don't have any explanation for it.

Lavelle: No, sir.

One explanation came yesterday when Gabriel, according to informed sources, told the committee that the secret orders, given on Nov 8., 1971, were to bomb Quanglang, whether the North Vietnamese shot at the reconnaissance planes or not.

Those "bomb regardless" orders are what put the Quanglang raid on the unauthorized list. As it turned out, the orders to ignore the "protective reaction" restrictions need not have been given by Lavelle's command since the North Vietnamese fired back as the armed reconnaissance force swept over Quanglang.

Gabriel told the committee yesterday that the North Vietnamese opened up on the U.S. with 23-millimeter planes guns. The F-4s dropped their bombs at that point, but inflicted relatively little damage, missing the guns protecting the field.

Stennis committee investigators, the Air Force Inspector General and a special Pentagon investigation ordered by Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird dug up the evidence that the pilots were told to bomb Quanglang whether the North Vietnamese fired at the reconnaissance aircraft or not. The partial transcript released yesterday includes this exchange on that point between cept in this one instance that James Woolsey, general counsel of the committee, and Lavelle:

would the pilots have had if it that." should have happened that they were not fired on at Abrams' authorization of a Quanglang?

don't believe they had any.

bility that they might not be

Lavelle: I don't remember that we did.

told the House Armed Services Committee in an open spired the false reports, as distinguished from directly orbe reports showing bombing the whole mission would renot triggered by hostile reaction.

Woolsey: Do you recall at that was doing it. any time criticizing Col. Ga-23 raid?

Lavelle: No, I don't remember that.

Several senators bore in on the question of whether Abrams gave his blessing to ignoring protective reaction rules and striking targets considered vital by Lavelle.

Lavelle, in the censored testimony released yesterday, any of my actions should raise stopped short of asserting that questions with regard to the Abrams authorized him to capacity of our military leadbreak the rules. But at one ers to fully accept our timepoint he testified that he felt tested principles of the suborhe had stayed within the spirit dination of military to civilian of the U.S. command in Sai- authority. gon headed by Abrams.

than Gen. Abrams had implied must be responsible to nato you or given full authorization for you to do in your command under him?

Lavelle: No, sir, I do not believe I did.

When it came Abrams' turn to testify about whether he had authorized Lavelle to bend or break the protective reaction rules, the Army general said:

"I do not recall Gen. Lavelle ever discussing with me, exwe have already covered, stretching the rules, breaking the rules, liberal interpreta-Woolsey: What instructions tion of the rules-none of > (The one instance was strike against the Mocchau Lavelle: I don't know. I radar station in North Vietnam near the Laotian border. Woolsey: Did you discuss The Joint Chiefs of Staff notiwith Adm. Moorer this possi-fied Abrams afterwards that it went beyond the rules of protective reaction.)

Continued Abrams: "In this Another exchange between whole period of January, Febthe two indicates that the staff ruary, March, we were sendalsify reports. The general had were authorized and encouraged to provide them with the support that would protect hearing on June 12 that he in- them, so the support went up and up on some of these missions. It was also authorized dering them, by telling his and encouraged that when command that there could not fired at or when attacked that spond to it and try to destroy the weapons and the complex

"So this was what we were briel at that commander's con-doing, and we all-I think we ference (in early February) for all knew that; my staff knew having permitted a pilot to re- it; Lavelle's staff knew it, and port 'no reaction' on that Jan. he knew it. But what we didn't know is that the strikes were being executed without any firing, without any reaction by the enemy."

> while conceding Lavelle, that he might have made "possibly a liberal interpretation" of the rules of engagement. told the committee he did it to protect his men. He added. "I am profoundly disturbed that "No one knows better than Hughes: Do you feel that I," said Lavelle, "that the opyou did anything differently erations of our military forces tional objectives and that one of the primary cornerstones of our Constitution is the concept of firm civilian control of t h e military establish-