

MAY 18 1972

NYTimes

Notes on People Albin Krebs

Secrecy Watchdog

To head a newly created Government watchdog committee to prevent bureaucrats from overzealously using secrecy stamps, President Nixon named John S. D. Eisenhower.

Mr. Eisenhower, son of the late Dwight D. Eisenhower and the father of Mr. Nixon's son-in-law, David Eisenhower, will be chairman of a committee that will include senior officials of the Justice, Defense and State Departments, the Atomic Energy Commission and the Central Intelligence Agency. The committee will hear appeals from the public for speedier declassification of specific documents, as well as implement an Executive Order of March 8 that Mr. Nixon said would make more Government documents available to the public.

The Executive Order established an automatic declassification schedule for documents stamped after July 1, calling for declassification within 6, 8 or 10 years for almost all documents.

The four former Beatles have agreed to split the fortune they made for and thus end the among them plications accord wh