U.S. Now Reports 15 Dead In Recapture of Mayaguez

By PHILIP SHABECOFMAY 2 1 1975 Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 20-The )efense Department, in a casalty report that a spokesman alled "as complete as we can take it," said today that 15 mericans had been killed in ast week's operation to rescue he Mayagüez and its crew rom the Cambodians.

The count also listed three parines as missing in action md a total of 50 as wounded. lesterday, the Pentagon re-orted five dead, 16 missing nd 49 wounded.

The spokesman said that it was possible that further inprmation could lead to the adition of the missing marines the list of those killed in acon and that a few more names ould raise the total of wounda. But he indicated that toay's report was likely to stand or the immediate future.

Of those listed as killed in ction, 11 were from the Marine lorps, two from the Navy and wo from the Air Force, The rounded included 41 marines, even from the Air Force and wo from the Navy.

The military assault was unertaken last Wednesday to reover the Mayagüez and its www of 39.

Another Question Raised

The defection of a Camodian warship to Thailand last reek, added still another to a umber of unanswered queslons about the Mayaguez incient.

A Pentagon spokesman, Joeph Laitin, confirmed today hat a 170-foot submarine haser with 40 Cambodians board had been turned over o Thai authorities in the port f Sattahip.

But in answering questions it a news briefing, Mr. Laitin aid he did not know if the hip had taken part in the Camodian seizure of the Mayaguez m May 12.

essel's crew apparently told he Thais, at least initially, that heir vessel had taken part in he seizure of the Mayagüez and that the crew had then hrown a Cambodian Com-nunist soldier overboard and ailed for Thailand.

Mr. Laitin said that the Penn whether the submarine chasr, originally commissioned by he United States Navy, had layed any role in the Maya-

Members of the Cambodian

agon did not have "any facts"

ruez incident.

No Mention of Craft

一点一个一个种数据中心或性的

All previous accounts from he crew of the Mayagüez and rom Administration officials on he incident indicated that only mall Cambodian gunboats and ishing craft had participated a the seizure. There was never my mention of a vessel the ize of the submarine chaser in eports of the seizure and the ubsequent American surveilance and recapture of the vlayagüez.

These questions were raised oncerning the submarine

:haser:

If the bigger vessel, which ias been in Cambodian hands lince the nineteen-fifties, was nvolved in the Mayagüez intident, why was the involvenent not reported? And why lid its crew defect afterward?

If it was not involved, why lid its crew members say so when they reached Thailand? Why did the Pentagon have no irm information today about the Cambodian submarine chaser, which reached Sattahip last week?

The Pentagon was able to trace the background of the submarine chaser, explaining that it had passed from the United States to the French Navy and hen to the Cambodian Navy in the early pineteen fifting nineteen-fifties.

Pentagon spokesmen were unable to give an explanation of how a United States-made patrol boat known to have been used in the attack on the Mayagüez had been obtained by the Cambodians.

A photograph published in today's issue of the New York Times and other newspapers, taken by a Mayagüez crew member at the time of the cap-ture, showed a patrol boat of the Swift class alongside. The Mayagüez.

Swifts Given to Saigon

Jane's Fighting Ships for 1973-1974 does not list any ships of this class in the Cambodian Navy. Jane's indicates that a number of the Swift craft were given to the South Vietnamese but gives no indication that any were turned over to Cambodia before the communist victory in that country.

A Pentagon spokesman, asked when and how the Cambodians had obtained this patrol boat, could not give an answer. He said he would try to check it out, but several hours later he still was not able to provide any information.

Meanwhile, interviews today with members of the Mayagüez crew members raised anew a question whether the Cambodians might have released the ship and crew without a military attack by the United States.

Wilbert Bock, radio operator on the Mayaguez, said today that Charles T. Miller, captain of the ship, had rejected an offer that he return with some of his crew to his vessel the night before the marine assault.

Mr. Bock, interviewed in San Francisco while on his way home to New Jersey, said that the Cambodians had offered to let Captain Miller send a radio message to American forces to call off the air attacks, Mr. Bock seemed to believe that the offer had been part of a plan to free the crew. (3 MAY)

Another crew member, Emil Puntillo of Kienosha, Wis. told an interviewer in Hong Kong of a Cambodian offer to send the captain and seven crew members back to the ship last Tuesday night. Captain Miller had told of the offer and said he had turned it down because he did not want to split the crew and because the boat to return them to the Mayaguez might have been sunk by United States planes.

But the Cambodian offer would seem to suggest that, at a minimum, the Cambodians were willing to negotiate. And as Captain Miller suggested, they might have let the Mayagüez and its crew go when they were satisfied it was not a spy

Captain Miller has expressed an opinion that the crew would not have been rscued without the marine assault. But his account and those of his crewmen would seem at least to raise a question of whether a delay in the attack and further attempts to negotiate with the Cambodian captors might have led to the release of the crew and ship without bloodshed.
