Vietnamese Say G.I.'s Slew 567 in Town

By HENRY KAMM

Special to The New York Times nam, Nov. 16 — A group of cisville, La., has also been South Vietnamese villagers re- charged in the case, with asported today that a small Am- sault with intent to murder. erican infantry unit killed 567 unarmed men, women and children as it swept through their hamlet on Manch 16, 1968.

They survived, they said, because they had been buried under the bodies of their neighbors.

The villagers told their story in the presence of American officers at their new settlement, which lies in contested territory less than a mile from the ruins of their former home. The officers refused to comment pending the outcome of an Army investigation into charges of murder against First Lieut. William L. Calley Jr., 26 years old Miami.

A squad leader in the lieutenant's platoon, Staff Sgt. TROUNG AN, South Viet-David Mitchell, 29, of St. Fran-

> [In Washington, a spokesman for the Army said today. that it would have no comment, in accordance with American Bar Association standards on pretrial discussion.

> [Capt. James Bowdish, attorney for Sergeant Mitchell, said in Houston that estimates of 400 to 600 dead went "far beyond" any figgures he had heard.

> [George Latimer, Lieutenant Calley's lawyer, said in San Antonio that he was "shocked" by the report, according to United Press International. "I only know what is in official records," he said. "My client had nothing to do with the killing of any civilians."]

A former soldier now studying at Claremont Men's College in California, Ronald L. Ridenhour, said yesterday that he had prompted the Army investigation by writing letters to Government officials after hearing several accounts of the alleged atrocity while stationed in Vietnam.

Continued on Page 2, Column 4

Continued From Page 1, Col. 4

The 'site of the villagers' former home, about nine miles northeast of the provincial caplital of Quang Ngai, is a deso-hatelooking place now. Viewed from a helicopter, the ruins of houses along a well-used dirt road testify that a community once stood there.

The provincial Governor, Col. Ton-That Khien, said today in an interview that the killings had occurred, but he added that the number of dead was perhaps exaggerated.

A responsible Vietnamese official close to the case said that those slain probably numbered between 450 and 500.

Villagers' Account

lagers, Do Hoai, in the presence know the exact number. and with the assent of a num-ber of others, this is what happened:

A heavy artillery barrage vakened the villagers awakened villagers around 6 A.M. It lasted for an hour, then American soldiers entered the village, meeting no opposition. They ordered all inhabitants out of their homes.

Although the area had been largely under Vietcong control, the villagers had engaged in no hostile action against the Americans and bore no arms.

The Americans forced the villagers to gather in one place in each of the three clusters of houses that formed part of the village of Song My. The settlement also bore the names of Tu Cong, Dinh Hong and My Hoi.

The three death sites were about 200 yards apart.

When the houses had been cleared, the troops dynamited those made of brick and set fire to the wooden struc-tures. They did not speak to the villagers and were not accompanied by an interpreter who could have explained their actions.

Then the Vietnamese were gunned down where they stood. About 20 soldiers performed the executions at each of the three places, using their individual weapons, presumably M-16 rifles.

In the interview,

The New York Times Nov. 17, 1969

probably been carried out by As told by one of the vil-reported, but said he did not and that therefore no Vietnam-> like most of the villagers in fantry advance. this green and marshy area between the central highlands and distributed a propaganda leaf the South China Sea, said that let about the incident. For that those who escaped the slaugh-reason, he said, full silence was ter, as he and his wife did, had observed to avoid providing hidden under the bodies of vic-suport for enemy propaganda. hidden under the bodies of victims until the Americans left The whole incident, he said, took about 15 minutes.

Mr. Hoai said that his mother, his older brother and the brother's three children had been killed. A gaunt old woman, wearing the black pajamas and flat conic of Vietnamese peasants, interrupted to say that her 19-year-old son had also been killed.

A number of people in the crowd during the conversation at the edge of the new settlement said that Mr. Hoai's account was correct.

Mr. Hoai, informed that the United States Army might pro-secute Lieutenant Calley for murder, said that he stood ready comment on the accusation. to go to the United States to testify at a court marshal.

Winesses Questioned

Earlier today, an investigator sidered the killings an unfortu-of the Army's Criminal Investi-nate exception. On the whole, gation detachment visited the he said, American troops were Americal Division, which con-more solicitous of Vietnamese ducted the operation during lives than his own troops are. which the incident occurred. He While declining to comment questioned witnesses and left on what action the American accompanied by two surviving Army should take to assertain village officials. Lieutenant Calley's role, Colo-

In the interview, Colonel Mr. Hoai and the other vil-nel Khien said that if one of Khien said that the killings had lagers said that they had ar-his officers were suspected of by subtracting the nuber of would have to face a military survivors—132 according to court. them-from the total known The population of the hamlet.

of the killings and no body arms against the Americans. count had been made.

unavoidable act of war.

The colonel said that the fewer soldiers than Mr. Hoai the Americans' stipulated zone ese clearance had been re-Mr. Hoai, 40, a rice farmer quired for the shelling and in-

Later, he said, the Vietcong When he realized three months later that the case was more serious, Colonel Khien said, the scene of action was no longer accessible because of Vietcong mortar fire and he could do no more than interrogate about 30 survivors. They gave him identical accounts of the killings, he said.

Praises Division's Work

The Provincial Governor said that as far as he knew President Thieu had not been informed of the slayings and no official complaint had been lodged with the American command. The senior province ad-The Governor declared that he he admired the pacification work done in this province by the American division and conrived at the death tool of 567 killing women and children he colonel said that he Depulation of the hamlet. They said they thought that that all of the villagers had all survivors had been found been unarmed. While most of in three new locations. those killed were probably not those killed were probably not The Provincial Governor said Communists, he said, there that the dead had been buried were Vietcong cadres in the by survivors within three days village who may have used

Another responsible Vietnam-Another Vietnamese, official ese official, who declined to be said that the village chief had identified because he feared the turned over to him a list of the propaganda use that the enemy dead, but the official refused might make of the case, ruled dead, but the official refused might make of the case, ruled to disclose their total number. Colonel Khien, who is 40 American soldiers might have years old and considered friend-ly to Americans, said that he hey had previously shown hos-had been notified of the killings within a week but at first had assumed that they had been the result of an artillery bar-rage and therefore a sad but unavoidable act of war

> Earlier, the vilage was identified mistakenly as My Lai, the name of six different hamlets in the vicinity. Differences in place names between cartographers and inhabitants are common in Vietnam.

> The Truong An settlement here is a concentration area in which about 2,000 former resi-dents of Vietcong-controlled hamlets have been consolidated to faciliate their defense. The village remains under constant Vietcong threat and occasional atacks.

To secure i for today's visit. the squad of United States Marines that normally defends it, together with two platoons of popular forces, was reinforced by troopers of an armored cavalry unit and additional American infantrymen.