ATROCITY CHARGE STIRRING BRITISH

Debate Sought in Commons or at Labor M.P. Meeting

By ANTHONY LEWIS Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Nov. 21 - The allegations of atrocities by Amer-Acan soldiers in South Vietnam will almost certainly be debated in the British House of Commons or before a meeting of the Parliamentary Labor party.

Pressure for a formal debate on the reports of mass murder - and the whole question of British policy toward the American involvement in Vietnam grew markedly today. Public interest in the charges of a massacre in a Vietnamese vilage in March, 1968, is running extremely high in Britain.

The object of the pressure, which comes from back-bench members of the Labor party, is to have a debate before Parliament takes its Christmas re-cess. That way, members could make their feelings known before Prime Minister Wilson goes to Washington to meet President Nixon in January.

7 Reports Dominate Press

The reports about the al-Jeged massacre in the village Songmy, near Danang, domarated much of the press today. a number of commentators remarked that the concern about The charges seemed more inrelative coolness with which the charges were being reported and discussed in America.

The main British Broadcasting Corporation television news tonight showed some film of an American Army sergeant who said he had been present at the incident and described it. the incident and described it. Then the B.B.C.'s Washington correspondent, Charles Wheeler, remarked on what he called the relatively calm reaction in the supposed overliding interest. In such cases on his Labor party colleagues from the Communists." to stop being so critical of the United States. "I suspect," Mr. Brown said the relatively calm reaction in the United States and said:

.*"Seen from here, it seems that the conscience of America rests in the House of Commons and Fleet Street."

In a dispatch from Washington for tomorrow's editions, The Times of London says: "There seems to be more con-utmost speed and thoroughness, ever happening again."

taking no account, in any wider ramifications, either of rank or of any supposed overriding na-former Foreign Secretary, called different standard of morality interest. In such coase on his Leber party called different formunists."

that sells 5 million copies a day an awful lot of specters in our and leans toward the Labor cupboard, too." He said he party, the reports covered all wished the Americans would of the front page this morn-"stop weeping" and "just get ing. An editorial on page 2 on with the job."

Called 'A Brutal Affair'

cern abroad than in America. are true, how have they been missed as deputy leader. One must assume a collective embarrassment, if not disbe-the distribution of the lief."

It was considered possible to take its course. And clearly content to take its course.

ion should be shocked at such torial headed "A Brutal Affair" detailed allegations. Even if that "military and civil authori-garded as on the party's right the charges seemed more interested to the ties will have to set up a full was highly critical in private states, and were puzzled at the extent of only 1 per cent, they relative coolness with which the charges were being reported and discussed in America.

The charges seemed more interested and they are substantiated to the ties will have to set up a full was highly critical in private and open investigation if America and world opinion is to be the comment by satisfied that such incidents are affected as on the party's right they are substantiated to the ties will have to set up a full was highly critical in private and open investigation if America and world opinion is to be the comment by satisfied that such incidents are affected as on the party's right. must be assumed that the inves-tigation will proceed with the are being taken to prevent their thought the Americans

In The Daily Mirror, a tabloid on a radio program, "there are

This brought a sharp reaction from left wing members of the "If the ghoulish allegations about trying to have him dis-

to take its course. And clearly center and the right of the Newspapers from right to left there will have to be a ruthless party would support Mr. Brown expressed unease or worse at the atrocity charges.

For example, the conservative Daily Telegraph said:

"It is natural that public opin-local party would support Mr. Brown that the atrocity charges.

The Evening Standard, the and disaffection from American sister paper of the right-wing policy has spread through the "It is natural that public opin-local party.

Thus a junior minister re-