for sending an innocent person to jail while he was in the secret police in Aden before he emigrated to the United States."

The relatives here of the three Yemenis held in New York said certain letters should clear them.

"Please ask the state of America to ask about my letters to Ahmet, in which I asked for guns," Mrs. Namer said.

Letters found in the Namer apartment were being translated.

"Ahmed could never do a thing against anybody," Mrs. Namer continued. "He is—and Abdo and Hussein—responsible for seven women—myself, our three daughters, as well as his three sisters."

She produced two letters written from the United States. One from her husband said that a gun would be sent to her "care of the boy Muhammad Bin Muhammad Flzandany in Taiz."

The other was from Abdo, addressed to their local agent, saying: "A gun will be sent to you via Muhammed Bin Muhammad Felzandany and when we ask you, go to Taiz where maybe you will get another. What is important is that you are certain we are all yours."

Ali Nagy Ahmed Namer, 68, cousin of Mr. Namer, who returned to Yemen 13 years ago after living 10 years in Brooklyn, explained: "A gun is identity for the people."
