Following is a transcript of President Nixon's broadcast to the nation Monday 3 Acor night, as recorded by The New York Times:

Good evening, my fellow Americans. Tonight I want to talk to you on a subject of deep concern to all Americans and to many people in all parts of the world, the war in Vietnam.

I believe that one of the reasons for the deep division about Vietnam is that many Americans have lost confidence in what their Government has told them about our policy. The American people cannot and should not be asked to support a policy which involves the over-riding issues of war and peace unless they know the truth about that policy.

Tonight, therefore, I would like to answer some of the questions that I istoning to me.

what choices do we have if we are to end the war? What are the prospects for peace? Now let me begin by describing the situation I found when I was inaugu-rated on Jan. 20th: The war had been going on for four years. Thirty-one thousand Americans had been killed in action. The training program for the South Vietnamese was behind schedule. Five-hundred forty-thousand Ameri-cans were in Vietnam with no plans to reduce the number. No progress had been made at the negotiations in Paris and the United States had not put forth a comprehensive peace proposal. The war was causing deep division at home and criticism from many of our friends, as well as our enemies, abroad. In view of these circumstances, there

In view of these circumstances, there were some who urged that I end the war at once by ordering the immediate withdrawal of all American forces. From a political standpoint, this would have been a popular and easy course to follow. After all, we became involved in the war while my predecessor was In view of these circumstances, there in the war while my predecessor was in office.

in office. I could blame the defeat, which would be the result of my action, on him— and come out as the peacemaker. Some put it to me quite bluntly: this was the only way to avoid allowing Johnson's war to become Nixon's war. But I had a greater obligation than to think only of the years of my Admin-istration, and of the next election. I had to think of the effect of my decision on to think of the effect of my decision on the next generation, and on the future of peace and freedom in America, and in the world.

Policy in the War in Vietnam

Setting the Stage

Let us all understand that the ques-tion before us is not whether some Americans are for peace and some Americans are against peace. The ques-tion at issue is not whether Johnson's war becomes Nixon's war. The great question is: How can we will be appeared. question is: How can we win America's question is: How can we win America's peace? Well, let us turn now to the funda-mental issue: why and how did the United States become involved in Viet-nam in the first place? Fifteen years ago North Vietnam, with the logistical support of Communist China and the Soviet Union, launched a campaign to impose a Communist government on South Vietnam by instigating and sup-porting a revolution.

South Vietnam by instigating and sup-porting a revolution. In response to the request of the Government of South Vietnam, Presi-dent Eisenhower sent economic aid and military equipment to assist the people of South Vietnam in their efforts to prevent a Communist takeover. Seven years ago, President Kennedy sent 16,000 military personnel to Viet-nam as combat advisers. Four years ago, President Johnson sent American combat forces to South Vietnam. Now many believe that President Johnson's decision to send American combat forces to South Vietnam was wrong. And many others, I among them, have been strongly critical of the way the war has been conducted. Weighing the Eactors

Weighing the Factors

But the question facing us today is-now that we are in the war, what is the test way to end it? In January I could only conclude that the precipitate withdrawal of all Amer-ican forces from Vietnam would be a disaster not only for South Vietnam but for the United States and for the cause of peace.

for the United States and for the cause of peace. For the South Vietnamese, our pre-cipitate withdrawal would inevitably al-low the Communists to repeat the mas-sacres which followed their takeover in the North 15 years before. They then murdered more than 50,000 people and hundreds of thousands more died in slave labor camps. We saw a prelude of what would happen in South Vietnam when the Com-munists entered the city of Hue last year. During their brief rule there, there was a bloody reign of terror in which 3,000 civilians were clubbed, shot to death, and buried in mass graves. With the sudden collapse of our sup-port, these atrocities at Hue would be-come the nightmare of the entire nation and particularly for the million-and-a-and particularly for the million-and-ahalf Catholic refugees who fled to South Vietnam when the Communists took over 1;1 the North.

For the United States this first defeat in our nation's history would result in a collapse of confidence in American leadership not only in Asia but throughout the world. Three American Presidents have recognized the great stakes involved in Vietnam and understood what had to be done.

In 1963 President Kennedy with his characteristic eloquence and clarity said we want to see a stable Government

We want to see a stable Government there, carrying on the struggle to main-tain its national independence. We believe strongly in that. We are not going to withdraw from that effort. In my opinion, for us to withdraw from that effort would mean a collapse not only of South Vietnam but Southeast Asia. So we're going to stay there. President Eisenhower and President

The New York Times

Johnson expressed the same conclusion during their terms of office. For the future of peace, precipitate withdrawal would be a disaster of immense magnitude.

A nation cannot remain great if it betrays its allies and lets down its friends. Our defeat and humiliation in South Vietnam without question would promote recklessness in the councils of those great powers who have not yet abandoned their goals of world conquest.

This would spark violence wherever our commitments help maintain the peace—in the Middle East, in Berlin, eventually even in the Western Hemisphere.

Ultimately, this would cost more lives. It would not bring peace. It would bring more war.

For these reasons I rejected the rec-ommendation I should end the war by immediately withdrawing all of our forces. I chose instead to change Ameri-can policy on both the negotiating front and the battle front in order to end the war on many fronts. I initiated a pur-suit for peace on many fronts.

Proposals Set Forth

In a television speech on May 14, in a speech before the United Nations, on a number of other occasions, I set forth a number of other occasions, I set forth our peace proposals in great detail. We have offered the complete withdrawal of all outside forces within one year. We have proposed to cease fire under international supervision. We have of-fered free elections under international supervision with the communists par-ticinating in the organization and conticipating in the organization and duct of the elections as an organized political force.

And the Saigon Government has pledged to accept the result of the election.

We have not put forth our proposals on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. We have indicated that we're willing to discuss the proposals that have been put forth by the other side. We have declared that anything is negotiable, except the right of the people of South Vietnam to determine their own future. At the Paris peace conference Am-bassador Lodge has demonstrated our flexibility and good faith in 40 public meetings. Hanoi has refused even to discuss our proposals. They demand our unconditional accentance of their terms unconditional acceptance of their terms which are that we withdraw all American forces immediately and uncondi-tionally and that we overthrow the Gov-ernment of South Vietnam as we leave. We have not limited our peace initia-tives to public forums and public state-ments. I recognized in Juncon that ments. I recognized in January that a long and bitter war like this usually cannot be settled in a public forum.

That is why in addition to the public statements and negotiations, I have explored every possible private avenue that might lead to a settlement.

Disclosing the Initiatives

Tonight, I am taking the unprecedented step of disclosing to you some of our other initiatives for peace, initiatives we undertook privately and se-cretly because we thought we thereby might open a door which publicly would be closed.

I did not wait for my inauguration 1 did not wait for my inauguration to begin my quest for peace. Soon after my election, through an individual who was directly in contact on a personal basis with the leaders of North Viet-nam, I made two private offers for a rapid, comprehensive settlement. Hanoi's replies called in effect for our surrander before perspinition.

surrender before negotiations. Since the Soviet Union furnishes most of the military equipment for North Vietnam, Secretary of State Rogers, my assistant for national security affairs, Dr. Kissinger, Ambassador Lodge and I personally have met on a number of occasions with representatives of the Soviet Gov-ernment to enlist their assistance in atting monipole protection reproted getting meaningful negotiations started. In addition, we have had extended discussions directed toward that same end with representatives of other governments which have diplomatic rela-tions with North Vietnam. None of these initiatives have to date produced results. In mid-July I became convinced that it was neces-sary to make a major move to break the deadlock in the Paris talks.

I spoke directly in this office, where I'm now sitting, with an individual who had known Ho Chi Minh on a personal basis for 25 years. Through him I sent a letter to Ho Chi Minh. 15 July 25

I did this outside the usual diplomatic channels with the hope that with the necessity of making statements for propaganda removed, there might be con-structive progress toward bringing the war to an end.

"Dear Mr. President:

"I realize that it is difficult to communicate meaningfully across the gulf of four years of war. But precisely because of this gulf I wanted to take this opportunity to reaffirm in all solemnity my desire to work for a just peace. "I deeply believe that the war in Vietnam has gone on too long and delay in bringing it to an end can benefit no one, least of all the people of Vietnam. The time has come to move forward at the conference table toward an early resolution of this tragic war.

"You will find us forthcoming and open-minded in a common effort to bring the blessings of peace to the brave people of Vietnam.

"Let history record that at this critical juncture both sides turned their face towards peace rather than toward con-flict and war."

Reply Was Received

I received Ho Chi Minh's reply on Aug. 30, three days before his death. It simply reiterated the public position North Vietnam had taken at Paris and flatly rejected my initiative. The full text of both letters is being released to the press.

In addition to the public meetings that I've referred to, Ambassador Lodge has met with Vietnam's chief negotia-tor in Paris in 11 private sessions. And we have taken other significant initiatives which must remain secret to keep open some channels of communi-cations which may still prove to be productive.

But the effect of all the public, private and secret negotiations which have been undertaken since the bombing halt a year ago, and since this Administration came into office on Jan. 20, can be summed up in one sentence: No progress whatever has been made except agree ment on the shape of the bargaining table.

Well, now, who's at fault? It's become clear that the obstacle in negotiating an end to the war is not the President of the United States. It is not the South Vietnamese Government, The obstacle is the other side's absolute refusal to show the least willingness to join us in seeking a just peace.

ing a just peace. And it will not do so while it is convinced that all it has to do is to wait for our next concession, and our next concession after that one, until it gets everything it wants. There can now be no longer any question that progress in negotiation depends only on Hanoi's deciding to negotiate—to negotiate seriously.

I realize that this report on our efforts on the diplomatic front is discouraging to the American people, but the Amer-ican people are entitled to know the truth—the bad news as well as the good news—where the lives of our young men are involved.

Now let me turn, however, to a more encouraging report on another front. At the time we launched our search for peace, I recognized we might not succeed in bringing an end to the war through negotiation. I therefore put into effect another plan to bring peace—a plan which will bring the war to an end regardless of what happens on the negotiating front.

It is in line with the major shift in

U. S. foreign policy which I described in my press conference at Guam on July 25.

Let me briefly explain what has been described as the Nixon Doctrine—a pol-icy which not only will help end the war in Vietnam but which is an essential element of our program to prevent future Vietnams.

We Americans are a do-it-vourself people-we're an impatient people. In-stead of teaching someone else to do a job, we like to do it ourselves. And this trait has been carried over into our foreign policy.

In Korea, and again in Vietnam, the United States furnished most of the money, most of the armament and most of the men to help the people of those countries defend their freedom against Communist aggression.

Before any American troops were committed to Vietnam, a leader of an-other Asian country expressed this opinion to me when I was traveling in Asia as a private citizen. He said: "When you are trying to assist another nation defend its tree-dom, United States policy should be to help them fight the war, but not to fight the war for them." Well in corrected with this miss

Well in accordance with this wise counsel, I laid down in Guam three prin-ciples of guidelines for future American policy toward Asia.

The Guam Guidelines

First, the United States will keep all of its treaty commitments.

Second, we shall provide a shield if a nuclear power threatens the freedom of a nation allied with us, or of a na-tion whose survival we consider vital to our security. Third, in cases involving other types of aggression we shall furnish military and economic assistance when requested in accordance with our treaty com-mitments. But we shall look to the na-tion directly threatened to assume the primary responsibility of providing the manpower for its defense. After I announced this policy, I found After I announced this policy, I found that the leaders of the Philippines, Thailand, Vietnam, South Korea and other nations which might be threat-ened by Communist aggression, wel-comed this new direction in American foreign policy. The defense of freedom is everybody's and it is particularly the responsibility of the people whose freedom is threat-ened. In the previous Administration, we Americanized the war in Vietnam. In this Administration, we are Vietnam-

In this Administration, we are vietnam-izing the search for peace. The policy of the previous Adminis-tration not only resulted in our assum-ing the primary responsibility for fight-ing the war, but even more significant did not adequately stress the goal of strengthening the South Vietnamese so that they could defend themselves when we left. The Vietnamization plan was launched following Secretary Laird's visit to Viet-nam in March. Under the plan, I ordered first a substantial increase in the training and equipment of South Vietnamese forces. In July, on my visit to Vietnam, I changed General Abram's orders so that they were consistent with the objec-tives of our new policies.

Explaining New Orders

Under the new orders, the primary mission of our troops is to enable the South Vietn'amese forces to assume the full responsibility for the security of South Vietnam. Our air operations have been reduced by over 20 per cent. And now we have begun to see the results of this long-overdue change in results of this long-overdue change in American policy in Vietnam. After five years of Americans going into Vietnam we are finally bringing American men home. By Dec. 15 over 60,000 men will have been withdrawn from South Vietnam, including 20 per cent of all of our combat forces. The South Vietnamese have continued

The South Vietnamese have continued to gain in strength. As a result, they have been able to take over combat responsibilities from our American troops.

Two other significant developments have occurred since this Administration took office. Enemy infiltration, infiltration which is essential if they are to launch a major attack over the last three months, is less than 20 per cent of what it was over the same period last year.

And, most important, United States casualties have declined during the last two months to the lowest point in three years.

Let me now turn to our program for the future. We have adopted a plan which we have worked out in cooperation with the South Vietnamese for the complete withdrawal of all United States combat ground forces and their replace-ment by South Vietnamese forces on an orderly scheduled timetable.

This withdrawal will be made from strength and not from weakness. As South Vietnamese forces become stronger, the rate of American withdrawal can become greater.

I have not, and do not, intend to an-nounce the timetable for our program, and there are obvious reasons for this decision which I'm sure you will understand. As I've indicated on several occasions, the rate of withdrawal will depend on developments on three fronts. One of these is the progress which can he or might be, made in the Paris talks.

An anouncement of a fixed timetable for our withdrawal would completely remove any incentive for the enemy to negotiate an agreement. They would simply wait until our forces had with-drawn and then move in drawn and then move in. The other two factors on which we will base our withdrawal decisions are the level of enemy activity and the progress of the training programs of the South Vietnamese forces. And I'm glad to be able to report tonight progress on both of these fronts has been greater than we anticipated when we started the program in June for withdrawal.

As a result, our timetable for withdrawal is more optimistic now than when we made our first estimates in June.

Now this clearly demonstrates why it is not wise to be frozen in on a fixed timetable. We must retain the flexibility to base each withdrawal decision on the situation as it is at that time, rather than on estimates that are no longer valid.

A Note of Warning

Along with this optimistic estimate, I Atong with this optimistic estimate, I must in all candor leave one note of caution. If the level of enemy activity significantly increases, we might have to adjust our timetable accordingly. However, I want the record to be com-pletely clear on one point.

At the time of the bombing halt just a year ago there was some conrusion as to whether there was an understanding on the part of the enemy that if we stopped the bombing of North Vietnam, they would stop the shelling of cities in South Vietnam.

I want to be sure that there is no misunderstanding on the part of the enemy with regard to our witnurawal program. We have noted the reduced level of infiltration, the reduction of our casual-ties and are basing our withdrawal de-cisions partially on chose factors. If the level of infiltration or our casualties increase while we are trying to scale down the fighting, it will be the result of a conscious decision by the enemy. Hanoi could make no greater mistake than to assume that an increase in violence will be to its advantage.

If I conclude that increased enemy action jeopardizes our remaining forces in Vietnam, I shall not hesitate to take strong and effective measures to deal with that situation.

This is not a threat. This is a statement of policy which as Commander in Chief of our armed forces I am making and meeting my responsibility for the protection of American fighting men wherever they may be.

My fellow Americans, I am sure you My renow Americans, 1 am sure you can recognize from what I have said that we really have only two choices open to us if we want to end this war. I can order an immediate precipitate withorawal of all Americans from Viet-nam without regard to the effects of that action.

Or we can persist in our search for a just peace through a negotiated settlement, if possible, or through continued implementation of our plan for Viet-namization, if necessary—a plan in which we will withdraw all of our forces from Vietnam on a schedule in accordance with our program as the South Vietnamese become strong enough to defend their own freedom.

I have chosen this second course. It is not the easy way. It is the right way. It is a plan which will end the war and serve the cause of peace, not just in Vietnam but in the Pacific and the world.

In speaking of the consequences of a precipitous withdrawal, I mentioned that our allies would lose confidence in America. Far more dangerous, In America. Far more dangerous, we would lose confidence in ourselves. Oh, the immediate reaction would be a sense of relief that our men were coming home. But as we saw the con-sequences of what we had done, inevitable remorse and divisive recrimination would scar our spirit as a people.

We have faced other crises in our history and we have become stronger by rejecting the easy way out and taking the right way in meeting our chal-lenges. Our greatness as a nation has been our capacity to do what has to be done when we knew our course was right.

I recognize that some of my fellow I recognize that some of my fellow citizens disagree with the plan for peace I have chosen. Honest and patriotic Americans have reached different con-clusions as to how peace should be achieved.

In San Francisco a few weeks ago, I saw demonstrators carrying signs read-ing, "Lose in Vietnam. Bring the boys home."

Well, one of the strengths of our free society is that any American has a right to reach that conclusion and to advo-

to reach that conclusion and to advo-cate that point of view. But as President of the United States, I would be untrue to my oath of office to be dictated by the minority who hold that point of view and who try to impose it on the nation by mounting demonstrations in the street. For almost 200 years the policy of

For almost 200 years, the policy of this nation has been under our Consti-tution by those leaders in the Congress and the White House elected by all the people. If a vocal minority, however fervent

If a vocal minority, however rervent, its cause, prevails over reason and the will of the majority, this nation has no future as a free society. And now I would like to address a word, if I may, to the young people of this nation who are particularly con-cerned, and I understand why they are concerned about this war. concerned about this war.

Letters to Be Signed

I respect your idealism. I share your concern for peace. I want peace as much as you do. There are powerful personal reasons I want to end this war. This week I will have to sign 83 letters to mothere fathere to sign 83 letters to mothers, fathers, wives and loved ones of men who have given their lives for America in Vietnam.

It is very little satisfaction to me that this is only one-third as many letters as I signed the first week in office. There is nothing I want more than to see the day come when I do not have to write any of those letters.

I want to end the war to save the I want to end the war to save the lives of those brave young men in Viet-nam. I want to end it in a way which will increase the chance that their younger brothers and their sons will not have to fight in some future Vietnam some place in the world.

And I want to end the war for another reason. I want to end it so that the energy and dedication of you, our young people, now too often directed into bit-ter hatred against those responsible for the war, can be turned to the great challenges of peace, a better life for all Americans, a better life for all people on this earth.

I have chosen a plan for peace. I believe it will succeed. If it does not succeed, what the critics say now won't matter. Or if it does succeed, what the critics say now won't matter. If it does not succeed, anything I say then won't matter.

I know it may not be fashionable to speak of patriotism or national destiny these days, but I feel it is appropriate to do so on this occasion.

Two hundred years ago this nation was weak and poor. But even then, America was the hope of millions in the world.

Today we have become the strongest and richest nation in the world, and the wheel of destiny has turned so that any hope the world has for the survival of peace and freedom will be determined by whether the American people have the moral stamina and the courage to meet the challenge of free-world leadership.

Let historians not record that, when America was the most powerful nation in the world, we passed on the other side of the road and allowed the last hopes for peace and freedom of millions of people to be suffocated by the forces of totalitarianism.

The Silent Americans

So tonight, to you, the great silent majority of my fellow Americans, I ask for your support. I pledged in my cam-paign for the Presidency to end the war in a way that we could win the peace. I have initiated a plan of action which will enable me to keep that pledge. The more support I can have from the American people, the sooner that pledge can be redeemed. For the more divided we are at home, the less likely the enemy is to negotiate in Paris.

Let us be united for peace. Let us also be united against defeat. Because let us understand: North Vietnam cannot defeat or humiliate the United let us States. Only Americans can do that.

Fifty years ago, in this room, and at this very desk, President Woodrow Wilson spoke words which caught the imagination of a war-weary world. He said: "This is the war to end wars." His dream for peace after Vorld War I was chattered on the hard reality of was shattered on the hard reality of great power politics. And Woodrow Wilson died a broken man.

Tonight, I do not tell you that the war in Vietnam is the war to end wars, but I do say this:

I have initiated a plan which will end this war in a way that will bring us closer to that great goal to which Woodrow Wilson and every American President in our history has been dedi-cated — the goal of a just and lasting peace. peace.

As President I hold the responsibility for choosing the best path for that goal and then leading the nation along it.

I pledge to you tonight that I shall meet this responsibility with all of the strength and wisdom I can command, in accordance with your hopes, mind-ful of your concerns, sustained by your prayers.

Thank you.
