F.C.C. Man Says Agnew Misdirected Drug Attack

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17 Instead of attacking rock music for spreading a "drug culture" among youngsters, Vice President Agnew should worry about political contributors whose corporations sell drugs, cigarette and liquor, a Federal Communications Commission member said today.

Nicholas Johnson, a Demo-cratic member of the commis-sion, criticized the Vice Presi-dent in a speech delivered here, dent in a speech delivered here, coincidentally, while Mr. Agnew was on a private mission to New York, reportedly raising campaign funds on Wall Street. Mr. Johnson said that the Vice President had misinter-preted the message of rock music writers and singers when he accused them of "brainhe accused them of "brain-washing" youngsters in a Las Vegas political speech on Mon-

Vegas political speech on the day. Mr. Agnew told Nevada Re-publicns that they should pay more attention to the song lyr-ics because rock music at its best is entertaining but "at its worst, it is blatant drug cul-ture propagands." In a speech to foreign serv-ice officers of the United he should "get on with the such as Steppenwolf's "The ica that have "stimulated the desire to escape." What is needed, Mr. Johnson contended, is more money, for urban aid, education, food pro-grams, mass transit, welfare, job training and health care. "The Vice President might better turn his attention to the corporate campaign con-tributors — of both parties — who finance their fat cam-paign donations with the prof-its they make from worthless or harmful drugs, and from cigarette and alcohol that first 'addict' and then kill hundreds of thousands of Americans a year," Mr. Johnson said. year," Mr. Johnson said. Citing television commercials that urge people to go "up, up and away" or "get high-on honey," Mr. Johnson said that television "teaches, with con-tinuous, air-hammer effective-ness, the dangerous and debili-tative lie that the solution to all life's problems and nagging anxieties can be found in a product—preferably one that is applied to the skin or taken into the body." The Vice President flew to New York today on what his office described as a "personal trip" to meet with unidentified Wall Street executives and "put in a pitch for the Repub-lican party." One White House source said that Mr. Agnew was seeking financial assistance for C. Stanley Blair, the Republican gubernatorial nominee in Mary-land.

Pusher." He quoted others that, he said, were complaints about the chemical life style in Amer-ica that have "stimulated the desire to escape."
