MITCHELL SCORED ON A RIGHTS MOVE

Sanctions Election Law for Mississippi That Aides Said Excluded Blacks SEP 24 1970 By FRED P. GRAHAM ial to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23-Attorney General John N. Mitchell has permitted a new Mississippi election law to go into the statute books, reportedly despite advice from his civil rights staff that the law is designed to prevent the election of Negro candidates.

An attorney for a civil rights group in Mississippi charged today that Mr. Mitchell's action was part of an effort to "sabotage" a provision of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 that gives the Attorney General the power to invalidate newly enacted election laws in the Deep South by simply asserting that they would undercut Negroes' voting rights.

The Justice Department asked Continued on Page 33, Column 1

ontinued From Page 1, Col. 2

longress to drop the provision rom the law this year, but Conress refused.

lawyer, Armand Derfer, of the Lawyers Constituonal Defense Committee, anounced in Jackson, Miss., that ne action would be challenged the courts.

According to reports from wyers within the Justice Deartment's Civil Rights Divion, the chief of the division, ssistant Assistant Attorney eneral Jerris Leonard, inrmed Mississippi officials of e action on Monday after nferring with Senator James Eastland, Democrat of Missippi, but without informing e staff of lawyers who had commended that the law be clared invalid.

Justice Department spokes en would not comment on reorts that the action had been ken against the advice of the aff lawyers. But a spokesman aid that Mr. Mitchell had inoked the voting rights law on everal occasions to invalidate outhern laws, and that Missis-ppi officials had been in-rmed that the Justice De-rtment might still contest ie new law in court if further evelopments showed that it riolated the rights of Negroes. The Mississippi election law a question has been called the "Evers bill." It was rushed through one house of the State Legislature in 1968, when Charles Evers, the black civil rights leader, ran ahead of six white candidates in a special election to fill the House seat left vacant after John Bell Williams was elected Governor of Mississippi.

Negro candidates were elected. On April 6, 1970, the Legislature passed a new law that would eliminate party primarries and would provide for a two-step general election in which all candidates would run without party labels. Under the law, only the two highest votegetters could compete in the general election.

Mississippi officials submitted the new law that would eliminate party primarries and would provide for a two-step general election in without party labels. Under the general election. Mississippi.

In the subsequent general for review. election of 1969, at least nine if 60 days pass and the Atiolated the rights of Negroes. Negro candidates were elected.

Mississippi

Defeated in a Runoff

Mr. Evers was defeated in a runoff against a lone white candidate. Had he been running in a general, rather than a special, election, he would have been elected because the law provided that the candidate who received the most yotes won without a runoff.

Mississippi officials submitted the new law to Mr. Mitchell under a provision of the Voting Rights Act requiring that changes in election laws by states in the Deep South shall not become effective unless the state either wins a court ruling that the laws do not have the purpose or effect of continuing discrimination, or submits the law to the Attorney General after having received the Mississippi law, Mr. Leonard sent a letter to Attorney General A. F. Summer of Mississippi saying that Mr. Mitchell would saying that Mr. Mitchell would not object to the law. Mr. Leonard said that the 60-day period was too short for the Justice Department to make a final determination, although it had solicited facts "from various knowledgeable sources in Mississippi" during its inquiry.

partment's Information Office of diluting Negroes' voting passed the word orally to some reporters but did not release the text of the letter.

Of diluting Negroes' voting strength and should not be allowed to become valid.

When Mr. Jones Tearned

Mr. Derfner said in a tele-

Mississippi" during its inquiry.

He said that the action was being taken because the available facts "do not conclusively establish that the present acts are afflicted with a racial purpose." Mr. Leonard noted that the law did not go into effect Section, headed by Gerald W. CIVII Rights Division last year after the Government revoked a school desegregation order in Mississippi.

Mr. Jones referred all questions today to the Justice Department's Public Information Office. Mr. Leonard, who is in the South, could not be reached for comment.

torney General has not objected, such a law goes into the statute books without the need for court approval.

Last Monday, the 60th day parsend the word orally to some strength and should not be sented.

When Mr. Jones Tearned from the department's Public Mr. Derfner said in a telephone interview today that Mr. Information Office on Monday Mitchell's decision not to object to the law gave Mississippi a practical advantage since the law would now remain valid unless declared void by a court.

A Memorandum Sent Trom the department's Public P